OFFENDERS & DEFENDERS

Unconscious Coupling & Conscious Uncoupling

Can I be Tinseltown brutal? Why did QUEEN of sticking her nose in other people's business, TV host Wendy Williams who made fame and fortune casting judgment on others try to keep her own dirty laundry hidden in a city where cameras/reporters are everywhere? Bottom line: Money and reputation. We hate cheaters, but how can we sympathize with Wendy when she's had no sympathy for others who've landed in marital doo doo? A cheating/abusive husband who's in love with another woman who BTW gave birth to his kid while Wendy was fighting addiction demons? And, this isn't just Wendy. It's what women tend to do when our backs are against the wall: Wallow in denial and hide from the truth. More of us might sympathize with Wendy if she hadn't tried to pull the wool over our eyes for so long by leading a double life. We all need courage to confront our struggles, and we need courageous role models who show us it's OK to tell our truth, get help and move on. Disney's bad luck with former superstar kids strikes again with Miley-Tongue-Out-Cyrus. Seems Aussie hunk/hubby Liam Hemsworth didn't appreciate Miley licking his face on the red carpet, and pulled the plug on their short marriage. Miley wasted no time finding a hot rebound and tonguing on a new face. Photogs caught her on a yacht with Kaitlynn Carter—Brody Jenner's ex. WOW. Khloe vs. Tristan, Adele vs. Simon, Bradley vs. Irina, Katie vs. Jamie... doesn't anyone stay coupled anymore? Hollywood has some serious splainin' to do. On a positive uncoupling: When cheatin' Jeff Bezos handed over billions to ex-wife MacKenzie—who knew she'd become an even more unforgettable woman for pledging half her $36 billion fortune to "Giving Pledge" a charity helping underserved people around the world? Checkmate, MacKenzie.

Knock-Down Drag-Out

"Kiki, Do You Love Me?" A line from Drake's smash hit "In My Feelings" had Kanye West in his feelings over the possibility that on his wife's CVS-receipt-long list of ex-lovers was the name Drizzy Drake. When Drizzy didn't squash the rumor, Ye who uses Twitter as a therapist, reportedly accused Drake of threatening his family. Kanye barely scraped by this year by declaring slavery was "a choice" on a live TMZ rant. Our advice: One of the 'K's' take his phone away! Oy... it's a daily tabloid rant that sisters-in-law Kate and Meghan are duking it out and now reports Prince Andrew was a bud of pedophile Jeffrey Epstein? Not only Hollywood needs a brain transplant. Epstein's death looks less like the end and more like the beginning of an insidious scandal filled with creepers shaking in their boots for fear of being exposed. Tick Tock because no one is above the law. For anyone with anything to do with these abominable acts we hope they get what they deserve: Prison. Hey, this isn't Bruce Lee

"Enter TheDragon"... especially not when a no-threat Kung Fu wannabe tries to show off his ZERO caginess at a Arnold Schwarzenegger event by attempting to terminate the Terminator with a sloppy drop kick. Anyone laugh at that fool as much as I did? Heads up event crashers: Celebrities are just as tired at the end of the week as we are, but get dressed up anyway and go out to support events they are affiliated with. It's always a treat seeing our fav stars up close—so attention-seekers—don't ruin the fun for everyone by giving movie stars a hard time, and get them second-guessing their public appearances because some psycho may try something strange. I guess the "Terminator" movie never aired in South Africa because who would be stupid enough to think they could bring down Schwarzenegger? Who BTW was there for the 'Arnold Sports Festival' to generate excitement for his fans—not get sideswiped by a freak. While most of us would have hit the floor face down, former California Governor Schwarzenegger barely budged, and then declined to press charges. As our buddy Mario Lopez described it, "Like a mosquito kickin a rhino, it didn't even bother my guy."

As for any future South Africa drop-ins... only time will tell if Arnold WILL BE BACK!

Sometimes Less Is More

Speaking of Mario Lopez: A.C. Slater got into hot water during a pod cast when he inserted his point of view in a discussion on gender identity politics, by saying that it was "dangerous" for parents to allow kids to choose their identity at a young age.

Mario, we love you dude, but how about NOT sharing your point of view on how others should raise their kids? We have the feeling you wouldn't like it. Onto Kelly McGillis and the celebrity haunting of what normal people refer to as "aging" something none of us can escape unless we're dead. No doubt Hollywood has earned the reputation of mostly "closed-door" to actresses over 21. So, if you're 22, you'll be playing someone's mama; by 23 you'll be auditioning for grandma. With that in mind nobody blinked an eye when McGillis was passed over in the upcoming "Top Gun" sequel and replaced by a younger woman, while Tom Cruise reclaimed his role. But everyone's jaws dropped when instead of bemoaning the movie industry, McGillis said, "I'm old and I'm fat, and I look age-appropriate for what my age is." Kelly is our hero. An actress who refuses to fist fight with Mother Nature and tells it like it is: Aging is inevitable!

For The Romantics

He's a killer and a notorious drug kingpin, but when the FEDS asked his beauty queen wife if "El Chapo" was a criminal they heard... "QUE!?" Men everywhere were fist pumping the air wishing their women were as ride-or-die as Mrs. El Chapo. Nothins' stronger than love! Or, could it be that she was doing her best to avoid a one-way ticket trip down the river? If Netflix reads this, I'm calling dibs on a possible storyline for a sequel to Narcos. Raise your hand if you want to be Karl Lagerfeld's cat. Why, you may ask? Because after the fashion guru and creative director of the House of Chanel passed away in February, it's now been reported that he left a good part of his $200 million fortune to his cat, Choupette (French for "sweetie") giving her about a million reasons to purr. Choupette, a celebrity in her own right will continue to live the luxurious lifestyle that she is accustomed to: Two maids will play with her daily and provide her with three food options from which to choose for every meal. I'm sure Choupette coughed up a hairball when thinking of her vast fortune. On a serious note, we will remember Karl for his impeccable style, witty quotes, and for making women all over the world throw out every pair of sweatpants they own after he famously said, "Sweatpants are a sign of defeat. You lost control of your life so you bought some sweatpants."

Karl, on vous aime. ■
