

Another Rescue

Friends:

Today we took in another rescue, a young boy from North Dakota who hasn't learned any llama manners. I started out introducing him to llama dominance. My own vet was here and both he and the former owner were surprised at how easily I put him on the ground. He went to a full "gcush" (?) h within fifteen seconds. Leading him was another issue. He wouldn't rise for me until I let him begin to graze. Then he began to walk. It was quite a sight to see how our resident herd inspected him and promptly let him know he was relegated to being the least senior llama on the farm. He's four and his dreadlocks show he obviously has never been shorn. He also came without a name.
