Food Plot 101: Management

MOWING - Mowing has two primary advantages. First, it reduces weeds and second, it improves the food plot's productivity.

Mowing before the weed's seedheads are produced, prevents weeds from spreading. Mowing also keeps the plants shorter, which deer prefer because it has less fiber, is higher in protein and more nutrients reside in the younger leaves and stems.

WEED CONTROL - The presence of weeds and brush in a food plot often indicates poor food plot management, typically either over-grazing or inadequate fertilization. Because they compete with desirable food plot species for water, sunlight and nutrients, their presence reduces both the longevity and nutritional value of the food plot stand.

The best weed control is achieved by maintaining a dense healthy stand of grasses and legumes through proper fertilization, cutting management and higher seed rates.

- Broadleaf control through 2,4-D
- Non-selective control through Glyphosate with Sticker

Use all chemicals according to the label.
