Bring your artwork, old, new, unfinished, barely thought of, and let it be placed on a comfy chopping block of your peers and creative equals and softly cut to small bits where soon after it will be stitched back together with delicate refinement.

What I mean is it helps to run your ideas by other humans. The critique process isn't always painful but it is always helpful if you allow it to be. Being able to defend your artwork is what makes it worth something. Give your creativity weight by being able to guide viewers through your world and become a better creative by being able to believe in yourself and be objective.
