Food Plot 101: Fall Plots, Fall Plots, Fall Plots

Seeding time has arrived across much of our geography for fall-seeded annual and perennial food plots. Here are a few tips and product recommendations to help you succeed this fall and beyond.

Timing Is Everything

The optimal time to seed brassicas (i.e., radish, turnips, kale, collards) and cereal grains (i.e., winter rye, winter wheat, oats) in the northern US is about 6-8 weeks before the average killing frost.

This timing allows for vegetative growth but prevents plants from producing seed heads too early for deer to feed. A mature plant in its reproductive stages, flowered out and beginning to put on a seed head will be much less palatable than plants in the vegetative growth stages.
