GETTING STARTED – MENU CREATION

Where to start

Planning a party can be intimidating and determining a starting point just as challenging. Some points to think about are:

1. FORMAT: Format is a great place to start for many events: are you looking for a relaxed, casual evening or more formal service? Is it a networking, social event where guests are supposed to mingle, or is it a structured gathering with a set agenda? Think about how you want your guests to feel and the type of environment you would like to be in.
2. TIME OF DAY: Time of day is another consideration. Will your guests be expecting a meal or will snacks suffice? Do you need to offer food at all?
3. TIME OF YEAR: Season is yet another factor – do you need warm comfort food or lighter fare?

FINGER FOODS

How do you determine what to serve?

A casual event could call for Nachos, and Sweet and Sour Meatballs, but if you're planning the company retirement reception, Bacon-Wrapped Scallops and Lobster Tail Lollipops would be more appropriate. An after-work event means you will be serving hungry guests looking for substantial items such as Lower Deck Mini Burgers while an evening event will require only light snacks of Spanakopita and Bruschetta.

How much to serve, you ask? Time of day is the primary determining factor. If you are hosting an event over a meal period, your guests will be expecting to be fed accordingly. Allow 10 to 12 hors d'oeuvres per person if you're serving over a meal time and make them substantial. Include Lower Deck Minis and Quinoa Rolls to help fill the void. Mid afternoon coffee break gatherings should offer four to five pieces per person and should be more snack oriented. If it's an evening affair, your guests will probably have dined before coming so two to three hors d'oeuvres per person should be fine. Go light with Mango Curry Chicken Vol au Vents or Bruschetta so your guests aren't ready to bed before they're ready to leave. Remember, this is a guide and you know your guests best. If your event is a gathering of vegetarians, the distribution is going to be different.

Should food be served and if so, when? Again, format is an important factor. If you're planning a casual, drop-in event, it's a good idea to have some items, like a Veggies and Dip Tray, set out for early arrivals to snack on, and you may want to consider setting your choices up in a buffet format, so guests can help themselves as they like. For more formal gatherings, you will want to arrange to have items circulated among guests, ensuring everyone has the chance to try everything. We will work with you to arrange timing for delivery so an assortment of items is available throughout the event.

SERVED MEALS

If you plan to offer a meal for your gathering, the same types of factors should be considered in planning your menu. The following page offers the building blocks for menus we have had great success with in the Tap Room.

How do you determine what to serve? A casual event could call for The Backyard BBQ Buffet, but if you are planning the client appreciation event then the Maritime Kitchen Party may be more appropriate. A lunch and learn means you could be serving our Seafood Chowder and Deli Sandwiches while an evening event will require something more substantial, such as a Tap Room Striploin. If it is winter, you will want to offer comfort food options like Roast Turkey Dinner, but in the middle of July, salads and corn on the cob would fit the bill. This is another situation where knowing your guests is important – if you're entertaining clients from out of town, offer something with a Maritime flavor, like Maritime Mussels and Pan-Fried Haddock.

How much to serve, you ask? Time of day is the primary determining factor. Breakfast and lunch events tend to be light, offering a single course with potentially a dessert for your lunch menu. Dinner options usually offer three to four courses.

What about options? It's difficult to satisfy everyone's taste, so give some thought to who has been invited. Be aware of any dietary restrictions, such as vegetarians, gluten allergies, or special needs your guests may have and be sure to talk to us about accommodating them. Do you have kids in the group who will require a smaller portion or an alternative meal? These are all details that, when dealt with in advance, will make your event run smoothly.

Should food be served or is a buffet better? As is the case with cocktail receptions, format is a key factor in determining service style. A casual gathering where guests are encouraged to interact and socialize may be best served using a buffet format. If your event is more structured and a formal agenda needs to be accommodated, a table service may be a better option for you. Consider a combination of the two, with appetizers and entrees being served and dessert offered in a buffet format. Again, think of the feeling you want your guests to have and we will help you find the best format to fit the occasion.

OFF-SITE CATERING

While we do have a beautiful space in our third-level Tap Room to host your event, we can also bring any event to you. Cocktail receptions or served meals can be accommodated at the location of your choice, and we will even help with arranging any rentals you may require.

Whatever your event, we will work with you to make it perfect. Use this information to get a head start on your planning, or leave it all to us. Call and tell us what you want to do and we'll put together some ideas to get you started, and work with you until you're satisfied and your guests have left happy.
