When Solution Met Problem

Get this: The yellow "Please Slow Down" signs can no longer be distributed. The initiative taken by Councillors Steve Yamada, Chris Leahy, Michael Emm and Rhonda Mulcahy is evidently contrary to a bylaw. In case you're wondering, the bylaw reads - and I paraphrase: "No sign that might make stupid drivers get a grip and not kill someone by speeding can be displayed, especially if it's judged by the average resident as an affront to one's opinion of what is or is not ugly."

Beauty is certainly in the eyes of the beholder. I personally don't see the fuss about the Mona Lisa, however I find Picasso's Guernica brilliant. The signs weren't meant to beautify our streetscapes but rather to alert drivers of the community's concerns. In their lifespan on my street - eight within 200 metres - vehicles have indeed paid attention and slowed (except for the two young goofs in the black Honda one afternoon).

The signs would not have been my preferred solution. A greater police presence would be wonderful though impractical and exorbitant. Or, the town could erect solar-powered radar speed signs at a cost of about $3000 apiece. They give a digital read out of your speed as you approach, suggesting that if a cop were nearby, you'd have been nailed for speeding. And if there are no police around, your guilt will still lighten the foot on the pedal. In fact, numerous studies indicate their residual effect slows traffic even after being removed. They're more practical than expecting cops to be ever present, yet costly given the number required.

Still, the councillors are to be commended for making an effort at being proactive, however artistically questionable.

Then there's the DRPS Road Watch program, as described in our Oct. 6 issue. If you see a driver doing anything you might deem illegal or dangerous, you record as much in-

The program doesn't appear to be far removed from a kind of community vigilantism, when an anonymous resident whining to bylaw about how someone parks their car results in a bylaw officer arriving at your door declaring your guilt.

Except for the odd extreme instance, which of us is qualified to determine the speed of a car or whether some other traffic infraction has been committed?

Worse, this is a reactionary program. Even if it occasionally works, it doesn't attempt to address the speeding issue we see in Brooklin and other wards except to "deputize" the citizenry. There may be no easy, quick fix, but common sense would suggest a cheap can-do temporary approach that harms no one is worth a try.

As to those who kiboshed the endeavour, exactly how does it help the situation? Perhaps you've heard this before: If you're not part of the solution...

Samhain - Halloween A celebration of, well, the dead

by Brad McIlwain

A strong wind kicks up as swirls of orange and red leaves from old maple trees whisper, and tug at my shadow — or is it something else trying to get my attention?

Pumpkins adorn porches and are lit with the magic of the season. From the corner of my eye, I spot a broomstick. Coincidence? I pass century-old homes on Baldwin Street on my way to see Sara Trimarchi at The Mystic Moon to get a deeper, more mystical sense of the tradition of Halloween, or the ancient Celtic celebration known as Samhain.

Chimes sound as I enter her shop and I inhale the smells of sage and other scents. On display are crystals, books, candles, dream catchers, rune stones, essential oils, jewelry and tarot cards as well an abundance of kindness as Sara greets me with a warm smile.

No good hats

"Halloween has been fun," she says. "I dress up and the shop is always decorated in a spooky manner. It's neat for people to see me in costume, but believe it or not, I've never dressed up as a witch. One of the reasons why is you can never find a good witch hat. I'll have to make my own."

Sara started her spiritual path in her teens, wanting to learn about the 'deeper rooted stuff.' "It's about the earth and healing with it, which is a big part of paganism, Celtic, and druidism. There are many different layers, stories, and realms. And different paths. We all walk a different one. That's one of the fun things about it. People can be eclectic and makes it a lot more open to interpretation."

Two years ago, she turned her passion and knowledge into her work. "Suddenly I had this quirky little shop in the heart of Brooklin. It's been a lot of fun meeting the many faces of Brooklin. I want to help people and show them there's more to discovering different religions.

"Why do I hear but not understand?

If you struggle to understand, you're not alone, in fact 47% of Canadians over the age of 60 have hearing loss. Your hearing difficulties could be caused by damaged hearing hair cells inside your inner ear (cochlea). When damage occurs in the high-frequency areas of the cochlea (where consonants are heard), speech may sound garbled and comprehension may become difficult. Our Brooklin Kids By Leanne Brown father, who'd spent two years training his four kids, ages seven to 11 how to safely ride the bus to school, was reported to B.C.'s Children's Ministry. Social workers put a stop to it. The incident sparked a nationwide debate about the nature of parental supervision and the government's role.

When to let your kids roam alone?

I have to be honest, I'm on the fence. On one hand, I personally would not let my child ride a Toronto bus without an adult. But I also saw his side. He felt his kids capable two years of training, after all - and the bus did take them door to door.

Are we suffocating our kids by not letting them roam on their own? Are we hurting independence and creating nervous, needy children? Or are we just being realistic and cautious?

It's a delicate balance. We parents tread that line throughout our children's lives. When do you loosen the reins and let them do things on their own? When do you keep them close?

Stretching limits

My eight year old is constantly trying to stretch her boundaries. She wants to go places on her own.

Last month, a Vancouver Sleepaway camp just strengthened this desire. She's perfectly able and happy to explore neighbours' backyards and ride her bike down the street to her friend's house. We're okay with a little bit of stretch. I desperately work to strike that balance between letting her roam on her own and being responsible.

> Some of her friends are starting to walk to school in groups. I struggle with this when I see children walking to and from the bus or school in our quiet suburb. While it reassures me that parents feel confident in our community's safety, it still makes me uneasy. Strangers have reportedly approached children close by.

> It's easy to worry. The home reno trucks, delivery vans and other unrecognized vehicles that drive through my neighborhood always have me taking a second look. I know there may be convicted sex offenders living too close for comfort, but in reality they aren't all out to attach our children.

Seeking independence

But being able to roam a little teaches valuable life skills. Independence builds confidence and self-sufficiency. It also helps them to be more aware of their surroundings, which they typically don't do with parents.

Ben Delvecchio Awarded Piano Gold Medal

A grade 6 student French immer- 7 level. He started playing at age sion student at St Leo's Catholic school, 11 year old Ben Delvecchio is the Ontario recipient of the Gold medal award from the Royal Conservatory of Music for his grade 6 piano and theory.

There will be a recital and awards ceremony in November. He completed his Royal Conservatory of music grade 6 piano last June and is now working on his grade 6 years and has been under the tutelage of Simone Lesley of Oshawa. When he was 9, he completed his Grade 6 theory scoring 94%.

The award recognizes the highest piano and theory marks in Ontario. He has already moved on to grade 8 theory which he completed last December with a score of 93%.

My co-worker has a teen with a new driver's license. Last week she let her daughter drive the car to school. Her daughter got there safely though she also took an unauthorized lunch hour trip to the mall with friends. Mom wasn't impressed. She started to worry where else her teen would go. In the larger scheme of things, the two block detour to McDonalds wasn't a big deal. It was rather the "not telling mom" that bothered her.

I get that.

It doesn't matter what stage your children are in. At some point, you will have to let them go, even if just a little.

It's okay if this scares you. It means you're doing it right.

asking questions, performing a ritual, or speaking out about your passion!" she adds. "While there is a ton of information out there, be sure to find one way that resonates with you, and never stop learning or mastering your craft."

A besom?

I mention the broomstick I saw on my way walk. "It's called a besom, which is a broom. It's a symbol of cleaning negativity, and clearing any dust that has settled, physically and metaphorically. It's almost another form of smudging, without the sage."

As the days shorten, shadows become thicker, and foliage sheds its last bits of colour, we become more sombre, marking the end of the summer. Traditionally, it was a time when people would reap their last harvest, symbolizing the doorway between the season of life and death.

"Halloween to me is Samhain, which is a celebration of the dead, the final harvest, and naturally the welcoming of the darker season. It is also a time to look at the year that has passed, and reflect," says Sara. "It's also a time when the veil between worlds becomes thinner, allowing us to interact in a more meaningful way with spirit. As a practicing pagan, it's important because we can take a moment out of the busy world to not only honour, but to also speak with our ancestors.

Learn about ancestors

"That can be as simple as lighting a candle and saying a prayer. You don't need to be a practicing pagan or witch to celebrate," she adds. "People have different traditions. You can sit down with your family and learn about your ancestors and honour them. You can also do seasonal decorating with your family or go for a walk and see how the season is physically changing your community."

Jack-O-Lanterns also play a special role for spirits during Samhain, offering a light to help guide their path. It's something Sara thought about, even when she went trick-or-treating as a child, "I'm thinking of all these spirits walking around with me, and seeing the Jack-O-Lanterns. Almost everyone on the street had one back then. It seemed more magical."

The Celtic festival of Samhain was celebrated up until the 7th century when November 1st was officially All Saints Day. The mass that was said was All Hallowmas - for all who were hallowed. The night before became known as All Hallows Eve, which would eventually become shortened to Halloween.

Connecting with loved ones

"Because of that, we get a chance to honour them in a timely fashion because the veil is thinned, and due to that, it's a time when we feel a strong bond with our ancestors. In the past, the tradition of creating that connection with our loved ones was simple, and rooted in humble beginnings."

They'd create altars with fresh cut flowers, totems, and symbols representing their deceased loved ones. "What I always thought was cool was that they always set a place at the table for someone who has passed."

Each Samhain, Sara continues the tradition, creating a similar festive altar. "It's dedicated to my deceased family members, using photos or belongings of theirs."

Tarot readings

The Mystic Moon offers tarot readings with Elisha from Jaded Realms. "She's been getting good feedback. Whether you're a skeptic or a believer, you come out hearing what you needed to hear," says Sara.

Elisha has readings at the end of October and into November. To inquire about tarot readings and upcoming classes or browse the shop, there's something magical for everyone at The Mystic Moon, 51 Baldwin St. N.. You can contact Sara on Facebook, or by telephone at (289) 200-4278.

Happy Samhain!

Blooming in Brooklin By Ken Brown

Prepping for spring blooms year in the garden. For instance, the other day I picked a ripe tomato with more ripening on that

Every year I plant a large trellis with a mixture of pole beans and morning glories. We ate plenty of beans in late summer but the morning glories were nowhere to be seen. While the last of the beans were recently drying out, there was an odd growth spurt and we've been enjoying the brilliant blue flowers of the morning glories ever since. Where did they spend the summer?

Blooming rose

Adjacent to that trellis is a rose bush. It's been there for a few years and never really done much. But this summer it bloomed and it now has several canes taller than me as it continues to be covered with large deep apricot blooms. It is unmistakably a David Austin rose, though I have no idea what variety. The tag is long gone. But since it's been unspectacular for a few years, I really didn't care. The long wet summer is clearly what it needed. In the future, I will be more diligent about giving it an adequate water supply.

The cool season vegetable crops I planted in sub irrigation containers in early September have proven they can also be happy in a late heat wave. We've had amazing growth and delicious results. We've finished all the kohl rabi, half the pak choi and ate the first of the Chinese (Napa) cabbage.

During the summer's bounty we do have to keep an eye on the calendar. There was a sharp taste of real autumn weather last week reminding us to take care of those necessary chores before we wake up to that fluffy white stuff.

Prep the snowblower

Now, with the lawnmower out of the shed, I need to pull out the snowblower to be sure it's in good working order. It's so much easier to work on it now than on a cold dark winter morning when I need it running. Dif-

It's been one strange ficult concept for an inveterate procrastinator, but I'm working on it.

> That saves the best for last. I've just planted my spring garden: tulips, in their amazing array of colours; narcissus in large drifts glowing like drops of sunshine on cool damp days; those first crocus poking their bright colours through the snow; and even earlier, the little white snowdrops blooming at the receding edge of old snowdrifts. On crisp autumn days, tucking a handful of smooth shiny bulbs into the soil is one of my favourite fall activities. I love running my hands through those bulbs sitting in their boxes. They're such a promise of wonderful things to contemplate through the dark winter days.

Go to the garden centre and be dazzled by the wide array of wonderful bulbs. Read the labels, particularly parts that tell you about their bloom times. With careful planning, you can have weeks of bloom in the spring. Plant several the same garden so that the later types will emerge and change the garden's lour and texture as the earlier ones finish and fade. Even before your spring garden is dry enough to work in, it should be announcing that spring has arrived and that pleasures of gardening are about to be-

The Day Hollywood Came To Brooklin

Empty director's chairs, but not a star in sight. Still, it was a neat day earlier this month when Hollywood dropped in to Brooklin's Oxford Learning Centre to shoot a few scenes for the spring 2018 release of the Amazon series "The Romanoffs." Oxford's Director Trisha Dosaj could only state the location had been selected a few weeks before and that, because of a non-disclosure agreement, she couldn't say another word about it. In fact, no one could. There were rumours of a couple of bonafide actor types doing their thing inside, but no one would corroborate. Surely the series will gain a viewing audience in Brooklin if only to acknowledge some of it was done here.

It consists of two components-outdoor sirens installed within three kilometres of the nuclear generating station, and an automated emergency telephone dialing system for indoor notification within the 10-kilometre area. Households and businesses with a landline in this area, which includes the City of Oshawa and towns of Ajax and Whitby, will receive the indoor notification.

The next testing is scheduled to occur in spring, 2018.

Whitby Reviewing Private Transportation Services

The Town of Whitby is undertaking a review of the licensing and regulation of private transportation services, which include taxicabs, limousines and transportation network companies (TNCs). mobile application.

The Town's current municipal regulations do not address TNCs, as the Business Licensing By-law only details the licensing and regulation of taxicabs and limousines. As such, the Town released a discussion paper earlier this month that includes a number of proposed policy options, related to the licensing and regulation of TNCs, in addition to proposed provisions for taxicabs and limousines.

Residents are invited to learn more and provide their feedback at a Community Open House, the details for which are as follows:

Durham Seeks Post-Secondary Student For Environmental Committee

The Regional Municipality of Durham is seeking a post-secondary student, residing in Durham Region, to serve as a member of the Durham Environmental Advisory Committee (DEAC). DEAC is a volunteer advisory committee that provides advice to Durham Regional Council on environmental planning matters, while also being involved with awareness and outreach activities.

Post-secondary student membership is open to students residing in Durham for the school year, who are enrolled full-time in a college or university program, and have an interest in environmental matters. Membership on DEAC exposes students to a broad range of environmental issues, as well as the functions of regional government.

Interested postsecondary students are asked to submit a letter of interest, outlining your knowledge of environmental issues, and how you feel you can contribute to the committee, by October 27. Submissions should be sent by email to deac@ durham.ca or Brian Bridgeman, Commissioner of Planning and Economic Development
