

Door Jamb and Loder Peak

June 2, 2018

We met at the AMA parking lot bright and early Saturday morning! 6:45 sharp we all hit the road. Forecast was calling for showers at our trailhead, but it promised to clear...which it did. But, someone forgot to turn off the fans...wind, wind, and more wind.

Initial introductions, first aid kit sherper had volunteered, and we were off. This hike gets you warmed up immediately. Steep climb at the beginning, then a gradual slope for the first while.

This climb offers you a nice variety of terrain. Throughout the hike options are available for hikers to test their comfort level on the slabs and slopes. Those wanting to stay closer to the trail could do so most of the time.

Several steps had to be negotiated by the group, because there were no other options. All did great!

After reaching the summit of Door Jamb, it was decided that we would go on to Loder Peak. Those wanting to chill, relaxed on Door Jamb while the rest went on for another 30 minutes to reach Loder.

The wind was howling, but we found some protection behind a small rise on the summit. Lunch was devoured and down we went.

After meeting up with those relaxing back on Door Jamb, a summit group photo was taken and down we went.
