

The Lucky Couple

She was a tall drink of water.
He was about to fall in love.
She had a smile as bright as the sun;
And, an ankle bracelet that said, "Heaven's above".

He was dumb as an ox;
And, as old as Methuselah.
Not the sharpest tool in the shed.
But, her thighs were smooth as butter.
And, he remembered what the ankle bracelet said.

Her eyes sparkled like diamonds.
He was a diamond in the rough.
Just two fools who fell in love,
And, being in love was enough.

He was as tough as nails;
And, as stubborn as a mule.
He had a big old goofy grin on his big old goofy mug.
But he worked like a dog,
And, cussed like a sailor.
But, he could be smooth as silk
And, lie like a rug.

She was cute as a button.
And, clean as a whistle.
That cute little dish could be quiet as a mouse.
But, she'd sing like a bird;
And, laugh like a hyena
Every time she got a little soused.

Her eyes sparkled like diamonds.
He was a diamond in the rough.
Just two fools who fell in love,
And, being in love was enough.

But, she soon discovered that he was a toothless wonder.
And, he had more money than the pope.
She was poor as a church mouse;
And, no one could accuse her of being a dope.

Her eyes sparkled like diamonds.
He was a diamond in the rough.
Just two fools who fell in love,
And, being in love was enough.

The first time they made love, she moaned like rolling thunder.
She howled like the wind.
Lord, she thought he would never stop.
And, now as time goes by,
They're thick as thieves;
And, a happy as pigs in slop.
