More Western States Opening Large Shooting Ranges

American Rifleman by Guy J. Sagi posted on June 8, 2025

Many game and fish departments maintain a few small and informal shooting ranges sprinkled throughout their respective states. Their primary purpose is sight-in convenience before hunting season's opening day. Rules are strict, safety officers rare, and handguns are often not allowed. Most are small, underdeveloped and closed to the public large chunks of the year.

That rudimentary approach to serving the growing number of gun owners is quickly changing, at least in the western U.S. At least two states are managing large, family-friendly shooting ranges with amenities that attract firearm enthusiasts from hours away, often internationally. Another pair are in the planning stages of building their own.

On March 6, the Wyoming legislature approved a measure to invest $10 million toward the creation of a 2,000-acre Wyoming State Shooting Sports Complex near Cody, Wyo. On March 18, Wyoming Gov. Mark Gordon signed the expenditure.

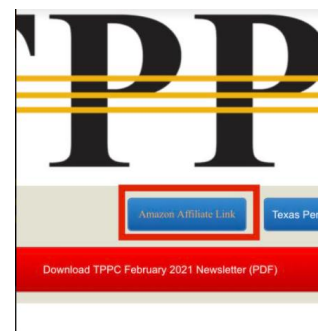

Meanwhile, next door, South Dakota Game Fish and Parks (SDGFP) announced in mid-May that a major sponsor has been identified for the South Dakota Shooting Sports Complex. Several companies, organizations and individuals stepped up in a big way to support the complex, including Pete Lien & Sons.

NRA Armed Citizen from June 2025 Magazine

In Tulsa, Okla., a man was working on a car in his driveway on March 24 when a homeless man with a baseball bat approached. The homeowner knew the man approaching and had sometimes bought him meals. The homeless man, however, said he was going to teach the homeowner a lesson and suddenly struck him in the face, breaking the bat in two. The homeowner defended himself by shooting the man twice. He then tried to help the assailant, but the man died of his wounds. Police allowed the armed citizen to return home after reviewing security camera footage.

Bloomberg Funded Site Argues Gun Control Part of 2nd Amendment History and Tradition

Ammoland Inc. Posted on June 9, 2025, by David Codrea

"Musket vs. AR-15: Judges Are Throwing Out Gun Restrictions Because of Antiquated Laws from America's Founding," a Wednesday hit piece on the right to keep and bear arms presented as a news report by The Trace, "published in partnership with Slate," laments. "A 2022 Supreme Court decision that gun laws should align with the nation's 'history and tradition' has sown confusion in courtrooms and weakened longstanding limits on firearms."

The "Founders could have never conceived of modern arms" is an old lie. Enlightened men, schooled in classical, political, legal, and military history, understood that firearms technology was evolving. From long before their time, there were Fourteenth Century multiple-barreled volley guns and a design by Leonardo DaVinci for a rotating triple-barrel breech-loading cannon.

Reconciling Trump's One Big Beautiful Bill ~ Suppressors & SBRs

Ammoland Inc. Posted on May 24, 2025, by Jeff Knox

(Click the link above to read the full article)

The House has passed their version of a huge budget reconciliation bill, which includes a Santa's sack full of budget cuts, budget increases, regulatory reforms, and tax changes, including a provision removing silencers from the National Firearms Act (NFA), treating them like guns instead of like machineguns or destructive devices.

A Budget Reconciliation Bill, because it deals with only tax and spending issues, is not subject to filibuster and can be passed with a simple majority vote in the Senate. Of course, there are rules about what types of provisions can be included in a reconciliation bill, which is why things like concealed carry reciprocity can't be added.

Assuming the Senate makes changes to the bill, the matter will go to a Reconciliation Committee, a conference of Senators and Representatives who will be tasked with reconciling the House and Senate versions of the package, sending it back to both houses for a final vote before it will be forwarded to President Trump for his signature.
