Bria Clark is a lifetime advocate for wealth accumulation, entrepreneurship, and lifetime learning. She pulls from an assembly of intimate and shared experiences to position herself as a valuable resource within her growing network. Ms. Clark operates a financial planning practice based in San Diego, California. However, she visits the East Coast and Mid-West, quarterly, for pre-scheduled meetings. She credits her “excellency first” mentality for fueling her daily commitment to deliver optimal client experiences.

Her introduction to the business world came from watching her mother build and run multiple family businesses. She credits her confident, focused hustle to the multiple positive influences that have inspired her. While at Howard University, she recalls spending every summer living in either Wisconsin, Connecticut, Illinois, or Ohio and working for Fortune 500 companies. While there, she got a deep understanding of how to thrive within the finance and insurance industries and how to operate within corporate culture. Before exiting business school in November 2014, she secured two insurance licenses issued under the Life, Health & Sickness lines of authority, and graduated with a B.B.A. in Finance.

Outside of her education, Bria launched a service foundation self-titled, BRIALife. Her firm works to be relevant in the life of others by providing resources, information, and products to the public. Her organization was launched June 2013, during the summer jumpstarting her junior year. To date, BRIALife has serviced sixteen small businesses, provided seven students with book scholarships, completed a financial empowerment college tour, and hosted six students for an apprenticeship program in Washington, DC. The BRIALife platform educates the public on wealth advancement, business development, and healthy lifestyle practices.

During October 2017, Theodore “Ted” Daniels, founder of The Society for Financial Education and Professional Development, Inc (SFE&PD), presented Bria with the Alumni of the Year award during the 10th Annual Financial Literacy Leadership Conference. This moment was special for Bria, because she was nominated for the award by her undergraduate professor and Golden Key International Honor Society adviser, Dr. Debby Lindsey-Taliefero. Bria has been groomed to provide value to people from all walks of life. Ms. Clark stands firm in her ability to transcend barriers created by language, culture, distance, and time.

A more personal ray of joy for Bria has been traveling to Africa, Europe, and the World Finance Center in Asia. When at home, she loves spending time with her family members, maintaining close relationships with mentors, and attending Howard’s Homecoming. These days, she’s diligently hosting client meetings or blocking off “quiet-time” to scan the pages of an exam book. Once her study schedule condenses, Bria will utilize her free time to continue traveling the world and growing her global network. Bria Clark is welcoming new faces, exploring new places, and taking on new cases!
