Solving To End Hunger in America

Hunger affects 1 in 6 Americans. Over 50 million Americans are considered “food insecure” meaning they are prevented from getting enough food due to limited resources, of those 50 million American 16 million are children. The face of hunger is changing. Today 60% of all food-insecure Americans live in a household with a full-time worker, and 15% live with a part-time worker. 620,000 households suffering from hunger contain a member who is full or part time military. Often times hungry Americans are hard-working adults, children, and seniors who cannot make adequate means and are forced to go without food.

Imagine having to choose between food and other necessities; millions of Americans face these tough decisions every day. 66% of food insecure households must choose between food and medical care, 57% must choose between food and paying for housing, 67% between food and transportation to work or school, 31% between food and education, and 69% between food and paying for utilities.

Hunger in the US grew dramatically increasing to 50 million in 2012, which was a five-fold leap from the 1960s. Food insecurity is existent in every county in America, ranging from 4% of a county population suffering from hunger to 33% of a county suffering. 25% of households in large cities with children are food insecure.
