New book offers workouts tailored to senior citizens
Richard Ingle announces publication of ‘Rick’s Routines’

BELLEAIR, Fla. – Wanting to share the experience he had while trying to stay in shape at the age of 75, Richard Ingle wrote “Rick’s Routines: Home Workout for Seniors” (published by LifeRich Publishing), which details the workouts he designed.

“I developed these routines which work for me,” Ingle says. “I have slimed down, firmed up, lost 20 lbs and my old body is still working. I want to share my experience with other seniors. Perhaps others can benefit from my experience.”

Not fancying paying for expensive equipment or gym memberships, the exercises Ingle shares allow seniors a continuous-motion full-body workout without the aforementioned items. The exercise manual for utilizes tennis rackets and air resistance for a workout that people can do at their own speed and in the privacy of their own home. Ingle also assures readers that the exercises do not impact knees and joints while working the abs and having aerobic benefits.

“Many of us seniors have suffered injuries and ailments over the years that limit our physical abilities. Still we need to keep our bodies working so we can live a normal life,” says Ingle. “We will never be 20 years old again. We will not run a marathon. We can still enjoy life.”
