CONNECTING WELLNESS TO

The Rural Health Medical Program, Inc. (RHMPPI) has been the heartbeat of the Black Belt since 1977, founded by physicians and community members who saw a need to provide high-quality healthcare and wellness programs in rural communities located in West-Central Alabama.

Expanding from two clinics in its early years to now six health centers in five counties, RHMPPI has continued to share the vision established forty years ago by providing primary and preventative care services. Health centers are located in Dallas, Marengo, Monroe, Perry, and Wilcox counties and strategically placed to offer services in Selma, Pine Apple, Thomaston, Marion, Uniontown, and Camden. Along with on-site board-certified physicians, nurse practitioners, and nurses, are specialty services including dentistry and podiatry.

Patients at RHMPPI health centers may use private insurance, Medicare, Medicaid, or opt to pay for services out-of-pocket. For those patients who choose to pay out-of-pocket and qualify based on verified income, RHMPPI uses a sliding fee scale to offer the same quality services at a more affordable price.

The RHMPPI Chief Executive Officer, Keshee Dozier-Smith, and the Board of Directors are focused on continuing to provide valuable health services to those who live and work in Alabama's Black Belt.

health services in each of its clinics as well as in the communities it serves. In recent months, the RHMPI has spread its wings to offer community-based services including low-cost athletic physicals to student athletes at rural high schools, distributing bookbags during back-to-school celebrations, and participating in several neighborhood health fairs.

In addition to participating in community events, the RHMPI partners with other health related agencies to provide services including vision, cervical, and breast exams, as well as HIV and Hepatitis-C testing. This fall clinicians from each of the RHMPI health centers will visit area schools to share facts on maintaining good health and wellness.
