UK: Opportunity – December 2019

Our article Ruled Britannia was published in early December. The main theme was that the Brits after a long and costly history of ending Europe's bloody experiments in authoritarian government had succumbed to a Welfare Dictatorship. Essentially another unaccountable and arbitrary bureaucracy in Europe.

That England should submit to essentially an unelected bureaucracy in Europe was endlessly promoted by The Economist. And the concept became so disquieting that I cancelled my subscription. That was in the 1990s and the loss of sovereignty has been appalling. On the plus side, who would miss the pretentious mag? In honouring her traditions of independence, Britain should Brexit.

UK: “Independence Day” – February 1st, 2020?

Nigel Farage has been the colourful leader of the Brexit Party in the European Parliament. Within his career he has been a Eurosceptic since the early 1990s. He advises that while he abhors the EU, he enjoys Europe. His final address as Britain left the parliament was short and colourful that with the theatrics will go down in history as outstanding.

Ironically, the break from authoritarian intransigence deserves lasting recognition. Perhaps as “Independence Day”.
