VA reform could be delayed for Trump

By NIKKI WENTLING
Stars and Stripes

A massive reform bill backed by the Department of Veterans Affairs will face resistance in Congress' lame-duck session starting Tuesday from a group intent on letting the new Republican-controlled Senate and President-elect Donald Trump have a say in how expeditiously VA employees can be fired.

With only a couple of months left as VA secretary, Bob McDonald is making one final appeal to Congress to pass the reform bill that's the culmination of his two-year tenure.

The 400-page Veterans First Act contains dozens of provisions to streamline the appeals process for disability compensation to allow more leeway in disciplining employees and to grant VA medical staff the ability to work flexible hours, among other things.

"We worked to design a new law. We've given a new law to Congress, and we've asked Congress to pass that new law," McDonald said Thursday during an event at The Washington Post. "I'm hoping it gets passed in the lame-duck session."

VETERANS

Reform: McDonald criticizes congressional inaction

FROM FRONT PAGE

But the legislation has garnered opponents, and one veterans service organization — conservative-leaning Concerned Veterans for America — is planning a major campaign starting Tuesday to thwart efforts to move it through the Senate.

'Power of presidency'

The bill was authored by Sen. Johnny Isakson, R-Ga., chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, and Sen. Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., the committee's ranking member. In the months after its introduction, six large veterans service organizations came out in support of it: Vietnam Veterans of America, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Paralyzed Veterans of America, The American Legion, Disabled American Veterans and AMVETS.

Concerned Veterans for America says the legislation is "watered down."

With Trump elected president, Congress should wait to pass a stronger bill that would give the next VA secretary more power to immediately fire employees, said CVA leader Dan Caldwell.

Trump would likely be in favor of "more aggressive accountability efforts," Caldwell said.

In campaign statements, Trump said he wants to "use the power of the presidency" to discipline and fire VA employees and pass legislation that gives that authority to the new VA secretary. Furthermore, he's said he wants to "drain the swamp" in Washington and cut the number of federal employees.

"They wrote it with the intent of hopefully passing it and having President [Barack] Obama sign it into law," Caldwell said of the Veterans First Act. "It is a compromised bill. With the new reality we're facing as a result of the election, and with the incoming president making it very clear he supports making it easier to fire bad VA employees, it doesn't make sense to pass a watered-down accountability bill at this point."

The day after the election, Concerned Veterans for America initiated a campaign to halt the Veterans First Act. The legislation passed the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee unanimously in June and could be taken up by the full Senate during the session starting Tuesday.

The group is asking veterans to contact their senators and tell them to vote against it. CVA has created an advertising campaign against the bill, and it flew in its field staff to go door-to-door to senators' offices Tuesday.

"The VA secretary will likely apply pressure, and I know some members of Congress still want to see it passed in lame-duck," Caldwell said. "We want to make sure we're letting members of the Senate know we don't view this as a positive bill for veterans."

Competing bills

A piece of the Veterans First Act aims to reduce the amount of time required to notify a federal employee of disciplinary action and allow them to appeal it.

Under the current system, the Merit Systems Protection Board hears appeals from federal employees when they're demoted or fired. The legislation proposes removing that board from the process for VA employees and creating a new Office of Accountability and Whistleblower Protection, which would be under the oversight of Congress.

Lawmakers have pushed for the MSPB to be removed from the process after the board reversed a series of disciplinary actions against VA executives in malfeasance cases.

Rep. Jeff Miller, R-Fla., introduced legislation in the House that competes against that provision of the Veterans First Act. The House passed the bill — the VA Accountability First and Appeals Modernization Act — in September.

Miller's bill would set a time limit the MSPB has to decide a case, and it would remove the board altogether from the process of disciplinary action against senior executives.

The Obama administration issued a statement about it, saying that part of the bill would strip VA employees of their rights, raising questions about its constitutionality.

Caldwell said that if the current Congress were to pass a veterans bill in the lame-duck period, Miller's bill should be it.

Miller, who has been critical of the VA since the wait-time scandal began in 2014, could soon have a larger hand in what happens in the department. Trump has said he is considering Miller as the next VA secretary. The Associated Press previously reported, Miller is retiring from Congress in January.

'One final opportunity'

In a report released the day following Election Day, the VA cataloged its achievements since McDonald took the position in 2014.

The report states the VA has completed about 58 million health care appointments in fiscal 2016, up by 1.2 million from fiscal 2015. It also states 82 percent of VA facilities have improved overall quality and that more veterans trust the VA.

In the report and in person Thursday, McDonald criticized Congress for the progress that hasn't been made.

Besides holding up a Senate vote on the Veterans First Act for several months, Congress has stalled the approval of leases for 24 new community clinics, McDonald said.

In a letter topping the new report, McDonald appealed to Congress to pass the Veterans First Act, writing that current members have "one final opportunity to do what's right for veterans."

"Otherwise, we risk prolonging eminently surmountable challenges that have plagued you and your VA for far too long," he wrote. "Congress should fulfill its responsibility to veterans and their families by taking immediate action."

Amazon glitches fixed in South Korea

By KIM GAMEL
Stars and Stripes

SEOUL, South Korea — Most servicemembers can again place orders with Amazon after the online retailer's website blocked some shoppers from completing their purchases for several days.

With the holidays fast approaching, U.S. soldiers and others who use the military postal system in South Korea were shocked to find themselves unable to order from Amazon.com.

The problem was limited to certain zip codes and appeared to mainly affect South Korea, although problems also were reported in Italy.

Servicemembers quickly formed a Facebook group to share information and coordinate their response. Many reached out to Amazon's customer service department, only to be told repeatedly about the company's shipping policy and restricted items.

But the online retailer was listening, and the problem was fixed for most on Sunday afternoon.

Air Force Tech Sgt. Brandon Peterson, who is stationed on Yongsan Army Garrison in Seoul, said he first encountered the problem on Thursday.

"We finished watching all the election drama and then thought, 'Let's just get our first big order of Christmas stuff done,'" he recalled, expressing relief after he was finally able to place an order on Sunday.

Troops, civilian employees and others based overseas depend heavily on Amazon.com and other online services that use the military postal system, which allows them to receive and send packages via the U.S. Postal Service.

Amazon did not immediately provide a formal explanation about what happened in response to a Stars and Stripes query.

"I'm so very sorry to hear there are problems with Prime shipping to our service men and women in Korea," Tammy Ray, of the executive customer relations team, wrote in an email. "Since this is a unique situation, I'm collaborating with our transportation to work on a resolution. I know your wait has been frustrating and for that I truly apologize."

A person at Amazon who was familiar with the issue told Stars and Stripes that the problem was limited and occurred because of new updates to the APO, FPO and DPO zip codes.

The reason some could create a shipment and others couldn't depended on the location of the servers that were used for the requests, the person said on condition of anonymity. Once the updates are registered throughout the system, everyone should be able to use it as usual.

Those still having problems should try emptying their cart and closing the browser, then open a new browser window and create a new order. Or you can send a help request via the "contact us" link on Amazon's website.

NY starts agricultural program for veterans

ALBANY, N.Y. — New York state has started a new program that aims to give veterans the skills and training they need to begin a career in agriculture.

The initiative allows veterans to use their military benefits while at the same time earning a wage during the on-the-job training, which can last from six months to two years. The program is starting with a single farm in western New York, but state officials said farms across the state can now apply to participate.

Democratic Gov. Andrew Cuomo announced the program's launch on Friday, Veterans Day.

Work progresses on NM county veterans court

LAS CRUCES, N.M. — A veterans court in Dona Ana County is a few months away from its start as officials put in the last pieces of infrastructure for the program.

The Las Cruces Sun-News reported the court would allow veterans or active-duty military members who are charged with crimes to choose treatment programs rather than jail time.

District Attorney Mark D'Antonio said grants and other funding sources can be pursued once the program is up and running.

New Mexico Attorney General Hector Balderas said he hopes the Dona Ana County program achieves encouraging results similar to veteran treatment courts in Bernalillo County.

A veterans court in Albuquerque has fewer repeat offenders — 71 percent compared with the national rate of 43 percent.

PASCAGOULA, Miss. — The USS Ramage will return to the Ingalls Shipbuilding's Pascagoula, Miss., shipyard on Nov. 21 for an overhaul.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A holiday tradition will take more than 100 Ohio-grown Christmas trees to overseas military units.

The Ohio Christmas Tree Association has been delivering trees to troops stationed abroad since 1995.

Operation Evergreen includes decorations prepared for the donated trees by schoolchildren, churches and veterans groups.

The Ohio Department of Agriculture inspects the trees at the agency's headquarters in Reynoldsburg in suburban Columbus to make sure they're free from insects and disease.

Air Force, Ohio to invest in drone research at local airport

Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio — Small drones are being flown in tests at a western Ohio airport as a step toward eventually flying the unmanned aircraft out of sight of their operators.

The new technology has the potential to change national security and defense operations as well as commercial businesses that use drones, the Springfield News-Sun reported.

"This will be groundbreaking," said Art Huber, director of operations at the Air Force Research Laboratory.

The Air Force and the state of Ohio plan to jointly invest $5 million in research equipment in hopes that Springfield-Beckley Municipal Airport will receive Federal Aviation Administration approval to fly drones beyond engineers' sight lines. If approved, the testing will push the limits of drone flying beyond what has ever been allowed under federal law.

The new technology will be used with the FAA's air traffic control network and other equipment to enable a ground-based sense-and-avoid system that would be the first step in leading to more automated flights.

David Gross, chief engineer at the Wright State Research Institute, said engineers also are working on software that would allow the drones to power themselves.

"The aircraft is making its own decisions based on the mission objectives that you give it," he said.

The Air Force Research Laboratory plans to install the new technology at the Clark County airport in conjunction with the Wright State Research Institute before the end of the year, Huber said.

Federal and state officials selected the Springfield-Beckley airport to serve as the new test site because it's close to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

The Rock and Roll War

By SEAN MOORES
Stars and Stripes

The sonic revolution and onemanship that defined 1966 make a compelling case to call it the greatest year in music history. Just two years after the Beatles fired the shot across America's bow that started the British Invasion, the mop tops had matured as songwriters and recording artists. In August 1966 they released "Revolver," a fully realized work that held the album supplant the single as rock's dominant art form. The other major players in the game of catch-me-if-you-can, The Beach Boys and Bob Dylan, released albums on the same day that are regularly ranked with "Revolver" on the best-of-all time lists — "Pet Sounds" and "Blonde on Blonde," respectively. Add a slew of great soul and garage rock singles, and it's hard to argue that another year was measurably better.

In the early months of '66, though, a one-hit wonder had the pop charts moving to the beat of a different drum: the martial snare of Army Staff Sgt. Barry Sadler's "The Ballad of the Green Berets," which was the No. 1 song in America for five weeks. Sadler's was far from the only musical moment of Vietnam, which came to be known as the Rock and Roll War.

The unofficial title is generally attributed to the late Michael Herr, whose 1977 book "Dispatches" detailed his time as a war correspondent in Vietnam for Esquire magazine. The book is an excellent example of New Journalism, the style that combined literary techniques with traditional reporting. Herr writes with a novelist's detail about "cassette rock and roll in one ear and door-gun fire in the other" in one memorable passage. After Herr receives credit for the title, the particular phrase first appeared in a review of Herr's book by York Times critic John Leonard: "It is as if Dante had gone to hell with a cassette recording of Jimi Hendrix and a pocketful of pills: our first rock-and-roll war, stoned murder."

Music is all over Herr's book, as it was all over the Vietnam era. It was a vibrant thread woven through the entire tapestry of the '60s. It changed the way troops went to war. It gave them a way to bond in a far-off place they wanted to leave. It helped them process their experiences once they came home.

On the homefront, music mobilized the anti-war movement. It was a time of chaos in country and more chaos on campus. For the first time, TV gave people a front-row seat to war on the nightly news. The news was not good. Khe Sanh. Body counts.

Four dead in O-hi-o.

Activists and troops had songs in common, although they had slightly different meanings for each group. That soundtrack, although less homogenous than popular films and TV shows would have us believe, became ingrained in our cultural consciousness. It also sounded a loud call for change, its final notes still reverberating.

Technology makes it possible

Music has always been part of war.

In early American conflicts, songs were sung by troops to help keep spirits high, like "Yankee Doodle" and "Battle Hymn of the Republic." "Vietnam was the first war in which technology made music widely accessible everywhere except the front lines.

It was different from previous wars, "certainly in the way that soldiers were able to personalize it," said Hugo Keesing, who taught psychology in Vietnam for the University of Maryland in

RAY MAHON/Stars and Stripes

Marines play records on top of the Rockpile, a jagged 750-foot hill at the junction of five valleys 7 miles south of Vietnam's DMZ in October 1966. Technology made music available to troops in Vietnam in ways not possible in previous wars. They used it as a means of bonding and dealing with the complexities of war.

1970 and '71, primarily to military personnel at Phan Rang Air Base. "There was a great deal of personalization of musical tastes, because it was possible."

In World War II and the Korean War, troops had to gather in central locations to hear radio broadcasts. In Vietnam, technological advances included portable transistor radios and tape decks. In addition to records bought at the post exchange and on the local economy — often for pennies on the dollar — GIs could buy high-end cassette recorders and reel-to-reel tape decks at reasonable prices to record the songs they wanted to hear. (It quite likely gave rise to mix-tape culture, in which future generations would woo the opposite sex by presenting carefully curated playlists.)

In "Armed With Abundance: Consumerism & Soldiering in the Vietnam War," Meredith H. Lair writes that by 1969, more than one-third of American troops listened to the radio more than five hours a day. For GIs between 17 and 20, the number was 50 percent.

Armed Forces Vietnam Network radio wasn't popular with everyone. Some younger troops complained that it catered to officers, at times keeping a tight fist on the playlist. It did, however, attempt to present varied programming.

"There really was music for everyone," said Keesing, who curated the 13-CD-plus-book box set "Next Stop is Vietnam: The War on Record 1961-2008."

"You got the Top 40 stuff coming in. You had Wolfman Jack that you could listen to on the radio. ... One of the favorite DJs who prepared her program back in L.A. but whose records came over was Chris Noel. So there were programs for every taste and there were a few places where all of those tastes, I think, coalesced, and it would be those songs that would be the soundtrack" of U.S. troops in Vietnam.

In 1969 and '70, Lair writes, servicemembers bought nearly 500,000 radios, 178,000 reel-to-reel decks and 220,000 cassette recorders.

"When I was there, music became a primary morale booster," said Doug Bradley, 69, who served as an Army information specialist at Long Binh in 1970 and '71. "The brass wanted to give us the creature comforts. They wanted to keep our morale up. Music was one of the real mainstays. (They said), 'We're going to let these guys buy radios and they can buy tape decks and they can buy cassette decks and they can buy guitars.' ... The fact that we had that kind of access and ways to disperse the music that they didn't have before, I think really makes (Vietnam) different."

Vietnam vets' national anthem

The early years of the war had a different soundtrack than the one we now commonly associate with Vietnam. The first troops in-country were generally older, military lifers. Some had fought in Korea. Some liked early rock and roll, but tastes for many trended to crooners, classical and country.

Country music, such as Johnnie Wright's 1965 hit "Hello Vietnam," tended to express the belief that, although there would be sacrifices, the United States would prevail in its just fight against the spread of Communism.

As music began to change, so did the American force in Vietnam. Troops, on average, got younger, and their tastes reflected that. The teenagers who watched the Beatles change the world on "The Ed Sullivan Show" in 1964 were now fighting in a foreign land. This was their war, with their soundtrack.

Songs didn't have to be explicitly about Vietnam to carry special meaning for troops. Like the generations before them, these GIs missed home. Songs such as "The Temptations' 'My Girl'" (1964) and the Box Tops' "The Letter" (1967) reminded them of what they'd left behind.

One song in particular galvanized GIs in their desire to get back to the States: "The Animals' 1965 hit "We Gotta Get Out of This Place." The get-out-of-the-ghetto song, written by Cynthia Weil and Barry Mann, was a good fit for the Animals, who hailed from industrial Newcastle upon Tyne, England. A Vietnam anthem wasn't part of the plan for the writers or the artists.

"We Gotta Get Out of This Place," The Soundtrack of the Vietnam War," Doug Bradley and

Craig Werner explain how and why U.S. servicemembers used music to understand the complexities of Vietnam in-country and back home. Through hundreds of interviews with those who were there, the authors heard time and again how their title track was a touchstone for the troops. They sang along with it on the radio. They listened to it in their hooches. They heard it in the enlisted men's clubs, played by Filipino cover bands.

"It's the Vietnam vets' national anthem," Bradley said. "We heard it time and time again. For me, in Vietnam, it's literal because we had a DEPOS date (Date Eligible For Return From Overseas) and everybody knew — Marines (were in Vietnam for) 13 months, Army 12. So you sang that song with a little more gusto every time that you got a little bit closer to the date."

Werner, a professor of Afro-American studies at the University of Wisconsin, and Bradley co-teach a class titled "The Vietnam Era: Music, Media and Mayhem."

"When we teach our class, we really hammer this with the students from the very first day on, is that there's no such thing as 'THE Vietnam vet,'" Werner said. "The same songs can mean very different things to different people, but there's also a piece of it that was shared." He believes that is summed up by "We Gotta Get Out of This Place." "That song tended to bring people together," he said.

Sadler a sensation

Getting out of that place was far from most Americans' minds in January 1966, when a quick victory in Vietnam was still expected.

That month, they got a symbol of everything that was right about U.S. involvement in Vietnam. Sadler, a clean-cut Special Forces medic who nearly lost his leg after being injured by a punji stick in Vietnam, wrote songs and sang for troops during his recuperation. One of those compositions, "The Ballad of the Green Berets," was recognized by the brass and RCA as a potential gold mine. It delivered on that promise.

"He kind of went viral 25 years before there was an internet," said Marc Leepson, a Vietnam veteran, historian and author of "The Ballad of the Green Beret: The Life and Wars of Staff Sergeant Barry Sadler from the Vietnam War and Pop Stardom to Murder and an Unsolved, Violent Death," which will be published in May 2017.

The album on which the song appeared, "Ballads of the Green Berets," was recorded in a day and went on to sell 2 million copies. The song, which Robin Moore, author of the novel "The Green Berets," helped write, sold 9 million copies, spending five weeks at No. 1 and becoming the top single of the year. Sadler appeared in Time and Life magazines and on "The Ed Sullivan Show." Looking back, that success seems unlikely during a year in which the Beatles ("We Can Work it Out," "Paperback Writer"), the Beach Boys ("Good Vibrations") and the Rolling Stones ("Paint It, Black") all spent time at the top of the charts.

In the context of the times, it makes more sense.

"It came out in January of '66, so the country was pretty solidly behind the Vietnam War," Leepson said. "There was an antiwar movement, but it was limited to some radicals on college campuses and old-line pacifists and activist leftist groups. It didn't take over the culture like it would have a year or, at the most, two years after that song."

Bradley, who was in-country when anti-war sentiment became firmly entrenched, remembers a different reaction.

"It was a joke by the time I was there," he said. "And (younger troops' reaction) was pretty derisive, just because, are you kidding me? This guy (Sadler) couldn't have been here, because he wouldn't be using that 'Cause this is a mess. We're not gonna win.'"

As Bradley and Werner report in "We Gotta Get Out of This Place," "The Ballad of the Green Berets" was widely parodied almost immediately after it was released. They also found, over the course of 300 interviews with veterans, that the song did not age well as attitudes about the war shifted.

"I don't think we talked to anybody who still likes the song," said Werner, 64.

Sadler quickly fell out of favor as a recording artist. He cut a couple of follow-up albums, but was unable to duplicate the success of his signature ballad. He had a somewhat lucrative second act in the late '70s as a writer of military/adventure novels. He later moved to Guatemala and was shot in the head during a mysterious robbery or assassination attempt in 1988. He died in 1989.

Leepson, who points out that the word "Vietnam" doesn't appear in the song, says that despite any lingering feelings some veterans might have, "The Ballad of the Green Berets" endures on oldies radio and in military and Special Forces circles.

"I think today, in 2016, the song is almost completely associated with the U.S. Army Special Forces, the Green Berets ... It's played at reunions. It's played at Fort Bragg (N.C.) all over ... They play it for trainees."

“They play it at Green Berets’ funerals. So it is a solid part of what the U.S. Army Special Forces is about today.”

The sounds of dissent

As Sadler’s song fell off the charts, the anti-war movement began to rise. The majority of our cultural soundtrack of Vietnam, drawn from post-war movies and TV shows, comes from the rock music that energized that movement. Except the actual soundtrack was much more diverse.

“I think part of what bothers me with the films, in addition to some of what they do with the subject matter and the topic, is that the music almost becomes part of a cliché,” Bradley said. “For me, the soundtrack was deeper and broader and sometimes quieter.”

Although presentations of the war in popular culture tend to lean on message songs, the intent is in the right place, according to music journalist, author and SiriusXM radio talk show host Dave Marsh, 66.

“What they tend to get right is the importance of the music to both the soldiers and to the people back home trying to create a different kind of situation,” he said. “What they get right is the passion ... it’s really the passion that the listeners brought to the music and the depth of what they took out of it. I’m not sure, a lot of times, that the performer necessarily understood that it was gonna cut that deep, or the songwriter, either one.”

Songwriters and singers had been part of the protest movement from the beginning. Most of them were folkies associated with the anti-nuclear and civil rights movements such as Pete Seeger, Tom Paxton, Joan Baez, pre-electric Bob Dylan and Phil Ochs. Some songs, such as Dylan’s “Masters of War,” applied in a general sense. Others, like Ochs’ “I Ain’t Marching Anymore,” were much more overt.

Protests against U.S. involvement in Vietnam sprang up on college campuses in the early ‘60s, and they became more frequent as America’s level of commitment became more public.

The movement built momentum in the latter half of the decade, with major marches in New York and Washington. Heavyweight boxer Muhammad Ali refused induction into the Army and was stripped of his title. Martin Luther King Jr. came out against the war, arguing that funding it was depleting social programs.

By early February 1968, a

JIM MARSHALL/Courtesy of Country Joe McDonald

Country Joe McDonald, a Navy veteran, performed his “Feel-Like-I’m-Fixin’-to-Die Rag” at Woodstock in 1969. It was one of the most memorable moments in the 1970 film documenting the festival. The song was popular with the anti-war movement, and the troops also appreciated its gallows humor.

Gallup poll showed that only 35 percent of Americans approved of President Lyndon Johnson’s handling of the war. More violence marred the Democratic National convention in Chicago. Richard Nixon was elected president in November, and the war escalated.

In August 1969, more than 400,000 gathered for the Woodstock Music & Art Fair in upstate New York. Although not explicitly billed as a protest, it was a powerful statement about how far the counterculture had come. The 1970 film that documented the festival gave even wider exposure to two enduring musical statements.

One was Navy veteran Country Joe McDonald’s solo acoustic performance of his “Feel-Like-I’m-Fixin’-to-Die Rag,” complete with a bouncing ball dancing over its biting lyrics: “Well it’s 1, 2, 3, what are we fighting for? Don’t ask me I don’t give a damn / Next stop is Vietnam.”

The other came courtesy of Jimi Hendrix. Formerly a member of the 101st Airborne Division, Hendrix electrified the crowd with an instrumental version of “The Star-Spangled Banner” awash in chaos and feedback that echoed the sounds of the war. Hendrix, who had played the song live before Woodstock, never stated that it was a protest — although a strong case can be made for that interpretation. It stands as one of the great musical moments of the ‘60s, no matter what you take from it.

December 1969 brought the first draft lottery since World War II, a development that made conscription a little more fair but also sparked mass demonstrations. Potential draftees, some just out of high school, were left with tough choices: Vietnam, jail or Canada. Multiple-choice question, without “none of the above” as an answer.

“All wars are tragic, but that was the special tragedy of Vietnam,” Marsh said. “That’s what’s in the music, is the combined vulnerability of people at just the age when they’re supposed to feel invulnerable.”

Nixon’s announcement of a Cambodia campaign in April 1970 sparked a fresh round of campus protests. On May 4, they took a tragic turn at Kent State University in Kent, Ohio, when Ohio National Guardsmen fired into a crowd of student protesters, killing four.

As the fervor rose, so did the volume.

Some of the most powerful and enduring protest songs came during the Nixon presidency: Creedence Clearwater Revival’s “Fortunate Son” (1969); John Lennon’s “Give Peace a Chance” (1969); Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young’s “Ohio” (1970); Edwin Starr’s “War” (1970); Marvin Gaye’s “What’s Going On” (1971); and John Lennon’s “Imagine” (1971). There were some songs from the other side, although they came largely from country musicians, such as Merle Haggard’s “Okie From Muskogee” and “Fightin’ Side of Me.” They weren’t so much pro-war as they were protesting the protesters.

“The music responds to the people. I think that’s what people forget,” Marsh said. “It’s not so much that the music is the voice of the people as it is that the songwriter and the performer must be the ear of the public. Before they can be the mouth, before they can be the voice, they have to listen and find out what’s going on. That’s the difference between Phil Ochs singing ‘I Ain’t Marching Anymore’ and Barry McGuire singing ‘Eve of Destruction.’ One (McGuire’s) is a fantasy, and it tries to be all-encompassing. The other is, very simply, a guy who had to make a decision. That he was not in a very good position to make accurately. One way or another.”

Coming home

Public pressure mounted in 1971 after the publication of the Pentagon Papers revealed that the Johnson administration lied to Congress and the public about the war.

On Jan. 15, 1973, Nixon announced that U.S. forces would withdraw from Vietnam within 60 days.

The troops were headed home, where they’d need to readjust to the world they left behind.

“They came back and they were basically the same people, except they’d grown up a lot more than you had,” Marsh said. “And the music had something to do with that, I think. Because they had to go deeper into it.” Music helped veterans process their experiences. Those who served needed more help, though. They needed help getting medical benefits.

They also needed help with rehabilitating the image of U.S. servicemembers, who were seen in an unfavorable light by some who blamed the warriors for the war.

In 1978, the Council of Vietnam Veterans — later renamed Vietnam Veterans of America — was formed to address the needs of vets. By 1981, it was broke.

Music again lent a helping hand.

Bruce Springsteen, who was spared going to Vietnam when he failed his Army physical, had been directly affected by the war when the drummer from his garage band was killed there. He became interested in the plight of veterans while reading Ron Kovic's memoir "Born on the Fourth of July," and was inspired to act after meeting Kovic. Springsteen reached out, through his management, to VVA co-founder and president Bobby Muller.

"We were hundreds of thousands of dollars in debt," Muller told Bradley and Werner in an interview for "We Gotta Get Out of This Place." "I'm in my [New York] office and I'm preparing to close down the organization [and] I get a call."

That call led to a meeting with Springsteen. The meeting led to a sold-out benefit Aug. 20, 1981, at the L.A. Memorial Sports Arena. It also led to a $100,000 check from Springsteen to the VVA.

"Unless we're able to walk down those dark alleys and look into the eyes of the men and women that are down there and the things that happened, we're never gonna be able to get home," Springsteen told the audience that night.

He has remained true to those words.

"The face of rock and roll, on this issue, from the beginning, has been Bruce Springsteen," said Marsh, who has published four books about Springsteen. "And there's a (Vietnam) song on his last album, 'High Hopes,' (called) 'The Wall.' So it's still on his mind. ... I think it's just like the Marines; you don't leave casualties behind. You don't turn your back on somebody."

The troops got out of that place. For some, it was the last thing they ever did. Through Springsteen's contributions, the survivors continue to be helped by "We Gotta Get Out of This Place," just like they were in-country. Again, the Animals and the song's writers could never have anticipated its reach.

Springsteen described its lasting influence during his keynote address at the South by Southwest Music Conference on March 15, 2012, in Austin, Texas.

"To me, the Animals were a revelation," he said. "The first records with full-blown class consciousness that I'd ever heard."

He then picked up an acoustic guitar and played the first verse and chorus of "We Gotta Get Out of This Place." Putting the guitar down, he said, "That's every song I've ever written. That's all of 'em. I'm not kiddin', either. That's 'Born to Run,' 'Born in the U.S.A.,' everything I've done for the past 40 years."

'A great moment'

The musical influence of the Vietnam era stretches beyond Springsteen. In the most literal sense, future musicians will continue to be influenced by those of the '60s. A band that hasn't even formed yet will one day make its "Revolver." The activism carried over, too, in the form of benefit concerts. GIs continue to consume music in a very personal way. The difference is that technology, which helped create the shared soundtrack of the Vietnam War, gave troops more choices. In gaining the ability to personalize their war experience, they lost the sense of community.

"Doug (Bradley) and I were in Montana a couple of years ago, and we were at a VFW club doing a soundtrack, or what we called the Vietnam Jukebox," Keesing said. "And we asked some of the younger vets who had been to Iraq and Afghanistan and Desert Storm/Desert Shield whether there were any songs that had the same kind of meaning as 'We Gotta Get Out of This Place.' Was there one song, or were there a handful of songs that every vet from the more recent conflicts would know, and the answer was no. Because they're now able to download and put on their iPods or whatever the songs that they like."

Despite its lasting effects, the soundtrack of the Vietnam War is unique. It was created at a special time, when technology, sociology and history converged. Music tied them together in a way they had not been connected before or since. That particular set of creative circumstances might never come around again.

"It's also just a great moment in musical history, which isn't an accident. That's not just nostalgia," said Werner, whose other music books include "A Change is Gonna Come: Music, Race and the Soul of America." "It's really the first time that rock, country and soul are talking to each other, and everybody was hearing all of that. You didn't have to love Johnny Cash to know who Johnny Cash was. You didn't have to love James Brown to know who James Brown was, and all the musicians were ALL listening to each other. Sam Cooke writes 'A Change is Gonna Come' in response to (Bob Dylan's) 'Blowin' in the Wind,' and back and forth. ... So it's a really interesting moment, and that just isn't the case anymore. The younger vets and younger people have all had 97,000 different kinds of music that they can listen to, and they make their own choices. And those musicians aren't talking to each other in the same way."

Iraqi Christians leave after praying at St. Addai church, which was damaged by Islamic State fighters during their occupation of Keramli village, less than 18 miles southeast of Mosul, Iraq, on Sunday. The Iraqi army reported that militants were driven out of Nimrud, a town near famed ancient Assyrian ruins.

MOSUL, Iraq — The Iraqi army said Sunday that troops have driven Islamic State militants out of the town of Nimrud, south of Mosul, near the site of famed ancient Assyrian ruins that were reportedly destroyed by the extremists.

Iraq's special forces, meanwhile, battled militants in the city of Mosul itself, where they struggled to advance against waves of suicide car bombs.

Troops are converging from several fronts on Mosul, Iraq's second-largest city and the biggest urban area under Islamic State group control, as part of an offensive launched last month. The special forces have advanced the farthest, and hold a handful of districts on the city's eastern edge.

The commander of the Mosul operation said troops took Nimrud, some 19 miles to the south, after heavy fighting. It was unclear if they had liberated the nearby 13th-century B.C. archaeological site.

"The 9th division of the Iraqi army has liberated the town of Nimrud completely and raised the Iraqi flag over its buildings after the enemy suffered heavy casualties," Lt. Gen. Abdul-Amir Raheed Yar Allah said in a statement.

The late 1980s discovery of treasures in Nimrud's royal tombs was one of the 20th century's most significant archaeological finds. The government said militants, who captured the site in June 2014, destroyed it the following year using heavy military vehicles.

In Mosul, the special forces say they have cleared the Qadisiya and Zahra neighborhoods and are planning to advance further in the coming hours. Over the past week they have inched forward slowly, trying to avoid casualties among their troops and civilians as suicide bombers in armor-plated vehicles rush forward from hiding spots among densely populated areas.

"The only weapons they have left are car bombs and explosives," Iraqi special forces Maj. Gen. Sami al-Arifi said as he radioed with commanders in the field. "There are so many civilian cars and any one of them could be a bomb," he said.

Troops were building berms and roadblocks to prevent car bombs from breaching the front lines. Since last week's quick advance into Mosul proper, they have struggled to hold territory under heavy Islamic State counterattacks.

Several suicide car bombers attacked the advancing special forces on Saturday, wounding around a dozen troops and three civilians and killing a child, officers said. They spoke on condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to brief reporters.

Civilians are paying a heavy toll in the battle for Mosul, with nearly 50,000 forced from their homes, most living in displaced persons camps. The Norwegian Refugee Council said Sunday that conditions were worsening for noncombatants, especially over the past week.

"Civilians have told us of horrific stories from inside Mosul," said Wolfgang Gressmann, the group's Iraq director. "They have given terrifying accounts of [the Islamic State] moving them from neighborhood to neighborhood, and from house to house, in tactics identical with being used as human shields."

Meanwhile, a leading U.S.-based rights group released a report alleging that security forces of Iraq's regional Kurdish government had routinely destroyed Arab homes and even some whole villages in areas retaken from the Islamic State group over the past two years.

The Human Rights Watch report said that between September 2014 and May 2016, Kurdish forces advancing against the Islamic State destroyed Arab homes in disputed areas of Kirkuk and Ninevah provinces while Kurdish homes were left intact. It says the demolitions took place in disputed areas in northern Iraq which the Kurds want to incorporate into their autonomous region over the objections of the central government.

Sunni Arab politicians have previously accused the Kurds of seeking to recast the demographics of mixed areas in northern Iraq. The struggle is particularly intense in the oil-rich Kirkuk region.

All sides fighting in the battle for Mosul have been accused of human rights abuses, with the worst allegations focusing on the Islamic State.

Militant presence in Pakistan grows

By KATHY GANNON
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD — The Islamic State group is increasing its presence in Pakistan, recruiting Uzbek militants, attracting disgruntled Taliban fighters and partnering with one of Pakistan's most violent sectarian groups, according to police officers, Taliban officials and analysts.

Its latest atrocity was an attack Saturday on a Sufi shrine in southwestern Pakistan that killed at least 50 people and wounded 100 others. The group said in a statement that a suicide bomber attacked the shrine with the intent of killing Shiite Muslims and issued a picture of the attacker.

When the Islamic State circulated a photograph of one of the attackers in last month's deadly assault on a police academy in southwestern Baluchistan province, two Taliban officials told The Associated Press that the attacker was an Uzbek, most likely a member of the Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan. More than 60 people, most of them police recruits, were killed in that Oct. 26 attack when three assailants battled security forces for hours before being killed or detonating their suicide vests.

The Taliban officials, both of whom are familiar with the IMU, spoke on condition of anonymity because their leadership has banned them from talking to the media.

Authorities initially said the police academy attack was orchestrated by militants hiding out in Afghanistan and blamed Pakistan's virulently anti-Shiite group, Lashkar-e-Jhangvi. But the Islamic State later claimed responsibility and Lashkar-e-Jhangvi spokesman Ali Bin Sufyan said they partnered with the Islamic State to carry out the assault.

In Afghanistan and Pakistan, the extremist group has adopted the name the Islamic State in Khurasan — a reference to an ancient geographical region that encompassed a vast swath of territory stretching from Turkmenistan through Iran and Afghanistan.

The Islamic State in Khurasan has set up its base in Afghanistan's eastern Nangarhar province, and while it has pledged allegiance to the Islamic State group in Syria and Iraq, it remains unclear whether there are direct operational or financial links between the two.

According to police, Afghan officials and Islamic State media outlets, the majority of Islamic State fighters in Afghanistan are Pakistani nationals, mostly from the tribal regions. Disgruntled Taliban fighters from Pakistan and Afghanistan have joined along with foreign fighters, mainly from central Asia.

Counterterrorism officials in Pakistan say the Islamic State has begun reaching out to local militants through its rich social media presence.

"They are inspiring the like-minded youth in Pakistan through their strong social media propaganda," said Junaid Sheikh, a senior counterterrorism commander in the southern city of Karachi.

A senior police official in Pakistan's eastern Punjab province, where several militant groups are headquartered, said the Islamic State group is firmly entrenched in Pakistan and its roots are growing stronger as it aligns with Pakistan's Sunni Muslim extremist groups such as Lashkar-e-Jhangvi. The police official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the media. The official also said that Lashkar-e-Jhangvi had largely relocated from Punjab to Baluchistan province in the face of a major military campaign.

"Pakistani Taliban factions that have sparred with the parent Pakistani Taliban have tended to express public support for ISIS," said Michael Kugelmann, senior associate for South Asia at the U.S.-based Wilson Center.

"I could certainly envision collusion materializing between disaffected Pakistani Taliban fighters now aligned with ISIS and Uzbek militants with pre-existing ties to the Pakistani Taliban. Either way, at the end of the day, all of these terrorists are cut from the same cloth ideologically and so we should never rule out operational partnerships."

Thousands march in 4th day of anti-Trump protests

By ROBERT JABLON AND WILLIAM MATHIS
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Donald Trump's presidential upset win sparked a fourth day of protests across the United States, with tens of thousands of protesters marching and railing against him.

Saturday protests — held in big cities such as Los Angeles, New York and Chicago as well as smaller ones, such as Worcester, Mass., and Iowa City, Iowa — were largely peaceful, although two police officers were slightly injured in protests in Indianapolis.

Demonstrators rallied at New York's Union Square before taking their cause up Fifth Avenue toward Trump Tower, where they were held back by police barricades.

The Republican president-elect was inside his tower apartment, working with aides on the transition to the White House.

Among those railing against him was filmmaker Michael Moore, who tweeted a demand that Trump "step aside."

Fashion designer Noemi Adad, 30, agreed.

"I just can't have Donald Trump running this country and teaching our children racism, sexism and bigotry," she said. "Out of his own mouth he made this division. He needs to go — there's no place for racism in society in America."

Trump's comments — particularly a 2005 recording of him making light comments about women — sparked outrage during his campaign. That spilled over into demonstrations following an election that ended with half of U.S. voters choosing the other candidate, Democrat Hillary Clinton.

Demonstrators in Indianapolis on Saturday threw rocks at police, slightly injuring two officers, said Police Chief Troy Riggs. Some protesters began chanting threats including "Kill the Police," and officers moved in to arrest seven demonstrators.

Rowdy demonstrators marched through downtown Portland, Ore., for the fourth night Saturday despite calls from the mayor and police chief for calm.

Several hundred people took to the streets and Portland authorities made multiple arrests after protesters threw bottles and other items at officers in riot gear and blocked streets and light rail lines. The exact number of arrests wasn't immediately available.

In Los Angeles, an estimated 8,000 people marched through downtown streets Saturday to condemn what they saw as Trump's hate speech about Muslims, pledge to deport people in the country illegally and crude comments about women.

Meanwhile, several dozen Trump supporters gathered at his vandalized star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame to urge the protesters to give him a chance. One person held a cross that read "All lives matter to me."

In other parts of the country, spirited demonstrations on college campuses and peaceful marches along downtown streets have taken place since Wednesday.

traffic in Miami and Atlanta. Protests also were held in Detroit; Minneapolis; Kansas City, Mo.; Olympia, Wash.; Iowa City; and more.

In Cincinnati, hundreds of protesters already had taken to the streets early Saturday afternoon to protest a jury's failure to reach a verdict in the trial of a white former police officer who killed an unarmed black motorist in 2015.

A mistrial was declared in the trial of former University of Cincinnati officer Ray Tensing. He was fired after shooting Sam DuBose in the head after pulling him over for a missing front license plate last year. Several hundred anti-Trump protesters joined the trial protesters and marched through downtown Cincinnati.

Demonstrations also took place internationally. About 300 people protested Trump's election as the next American president outside the U.S. Embassy near the landmark Brandenburg Gate in Berlin.

President Barack Obama meets in Berlin next week with Chancellor Angela Merkel and several other European leaders and is expected to confront global concerns about Trump's election.

Civilian oversight of police OK'd in some cities

By SADIE GURMAN
Associated Press

DENVER — Amid a national push for greater police accountability, voters in several major cities have approved measures to create or strengthen civilian oversight of law enforcement.

The trend reflects growing public demand for independent reviews of misconduct claims after deadly police encounters in cities such as Ferguson, Mo., Baltimore and New York spotlighted police use of force and interaction with minorities.

Voters in New Orleans, Honolulu, Miami and San Francisco passed plans Tuesday to bolster existing civilian oversight programs. In Oakland, Calif., voters created a powerful civilian-run police commission to investigate problems within the department, which is reeling from a sex scandal involving several officers.

Denver voters added provisions to the city charter to protect the existing independent monitor system. The measure makes it impossible for officials to cut the position without another public vote. "There's a recognition that to help fix the issues in policing, we need not only to be focused on the few bad apples but to identify problems with the barrel itself," said Denver's independent monitor, Nicholas Mitchell.

Civilian police review boards began forming during the civil rights movement in the 1960s and flourished in the early 1990s after Rodney King's beating by police officers in Los Angeles was captured on video, said Samuel Walker, a policing expert who studies citizen oversight.

Yet some efforts fizzled or shrank over the years due to budget cuts and other problems before the recent resurgence.

A Justice Department-funded study by the National Association of Civilian Oversight of Law Enforcement found at least 144 such oversight agencies in 2016 in the nation — up from 100 in 2001.

Some cities such as New York and Chicago have inspectors general or police monitors who review policy and procedure; others have boards that eye citizen complaints about officers.

Many of those efforts were launched through executive orders or because city councils approved ordinances.

It's unusual that the issue has been put directly to voters, Walker said, a sign that more people see civilian oversight as a key part of public safety.

Chicago police chief agrees to monthly meetings with black student protesters

By DON BABWIN
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Chicago's police chief agreed Friday to hold monthly meetings with a group of black high school students who had planned a demonstration protesting an officer's fatal shooting of a black man and racist text messages distributed by students at another school.

Superintendent Eddie Johnson met with the group of public school students, the principal of a Catholic school where students distributed the texts and leaders in the Mount Greenwood community on the city's South Side.

He commended the students for "forcing" officials to discuss their safety concerns and assured them that if they do decide to protest, police will make sure they're protected.

Marist, the Catholic high school, canceled classes Friday after the group that calls itself

Black Lives Matter Youth scheduled a demonstration. One of its organizers, Eva Lewis, said the students' protest was postponed because the school district contacted their parents to warn them about potential threats.

Johnson provided few details about the meeting but confirmed his offer to talk monthly to the group.

"I told them if they created a curriculum and they wanted to come in and speak to members of the [Chicago Police Department], I would facilitate," he said.

The meeting came amid increased tensions in the predominantly white neighborhood that is home to many police officers, firefighters and other city employees.

On Nov. 5, an off-duty police officer fatally shot Joshua Beal, 25, an Indianapolis resident. Police said Beal pointed a gun at the officer during a melee that began when an off-duty firefighter told the driver of the vehicle Beal was in that it needed to be moved because it was blocking a fire station's driveway.

Since then, activists have held at least two demonstrations — both of which attracted largely white crowds that shouted profanity and racially charged language at the protesters.

At Marist, administrators launched an investigation after media reported that some female students in a group text discussed the shooting and the subsequent protests, with one using a racial slur against blacks.

In a message posted online, school officials said they were "devastated by the incident" and that security at the school had been increased. The school also said "disciplinary action" had already been taken, but they would not elaborate.

have said they were merely trying to stand up in support for the many police officers who live in the community. But the scene that was captured on videos showed angry crowds shouting down the demonstrators to go back to their communities and revving their motorcycles to drown out what they were saying.

Shots fired at NY mall; no injuries reported

Associated Press

GUILDERLAND, N.Y. — Hundreds of shoppers at a crowded mall fled in panic amid gunfire that erupted near an Apple store in suburban Albany, N.Y.

There were no immediate reports of injuries in the violent melee Saturday at Crossgates Mall in Guilderland, police Chief Carol Lawlor said.

More than 100 officers with assault rifles were deployed "because a shooter may still be in the mall," she said about six hours after the shooting.

Witnesses told law enforcement authorities they heard one, possibly two shots fired about 2:30 p.m. near the Apple store on the street level, Lawlor said.

Authorities with SWAT teams were searching for suspects into the night, the chief said.

Police locked down the mall, one of the largest in New York, with 250 stores and restaurants. Both shoppers and employees already inside businesses were instructed to shelter in place.

A police helicopter flew overhead while investigators checked security cameras for clues they hoped would lead to suspects.

They were examining footage that showed a man in a white shirt and black hoodie near the shooting scene.

State police Maj. Bill Keeler told the Albany Times-Union that reports suggested a possible confrontation between two men who fled.

Mall management is working with authorities, Lawlor said, "and, hopefully, we'll bring this to a successful conclusion."

A woman lights a candle outside the Bataclan concert hall in Paris on Saturday as France marks the one-year anniversary of the deadly terrorist attack that killed 90 people.

Survivors of Paris attack work to heal and unite one year on

By ANGELA CHARLTON
AND OLEG CETINIC
Associated Press

PARIS — The flashbacks come to Denys Plaud unbidden, making it hard to work: Gunshots threatening to pierce his cramped refuge in the Bataclan theater. The excruciating silence between rounds of fire. And when it was all over, stepping over the dead and dying to reach freedom.

One year on, survivors of France's deadliest extremist attacks are trying to look to the future, but they will never forget.

More than 1,700 people have been officially recognized as victims of the horror that unfolded on Nov. 13, 2015, at the Bataclan, Paris cafes and the national stadium. In addition to the 130 who died, nine remain hospitalized and others are paralyzed or otherwise irreparably damaged. According to the government's victims' minister, more than 600 are still receiving psychological treatment.

"Like a veteran, I will always have to live with this horrible (memory). You cannot make them fade. You can learn to live with them," Plaud said.

Plaud, 48, a math and physics tutor, wrote a book to process his anguish. Cafe owner Gregory Reibenberg, whose wife died in his arms, also wrote a book — to help their 9-year-old daughter heal, and "to find sense in the senseless." Another survivor turned his flashbacks into a graphic novel.

As France prepared to mark one year since the attacks with commemorations Sunday, Plaud still seems surprised that he escaped alive that night.

Itching to dance as he watched a concert by California rock band Eagles of Death Metal, he left the crowded dance floor for the balcony, for more room to move around.

"[W]hen I heard some shots, some screaming from people being shot, I told myself there's something wrong," he told The Associated Press. "I ran."

He and about 15 others hid in a small room and called police, who told them to keep quiet until emergency crews came.

It took nearly three hours.

"When finally the emergency crew came to rescue us, we passed from that dark, tiny room to full light with a bloody battlefield. And policemen every five meters telling me, 'Don't look at them, mister, they are dead. You cannot do anything,'" he said. But "there were so many corpses I had to look where I put my feet."

Today, the memories sometimes pierce his concentration when he is teaching, and he has to stop.

Survivors also face frustrations — the protracted investigation, the bureaucracy required to be recognized as victims — allowing for compensation and medical support. And what they see as injustices, like not being invited to the Bataclan's reopening concert with Sting on Saturday night. Families of those who died were given the priority instead.

Reibenberg has chosen to look to the future after what happened that night, when 19 people were killed in his cafe, La Belle Equipe. His wife, Djamila's, last words were "take care of Tess," their daughter. His "guardian angel," cafe manager and longtime friend, Hodda Saadi, also died, along with her sister, Halima, celebrating her 36th birthday.

His message for the attackers is clear: "It's not because you shoot us and take away our cherished ones that we will suddenly become stupid and hateful people who will stop loving others."

EU officials will gather to discuss Trump's impact

By LORNE COOK
Associated Press

BRUSSELS — European Union foreign ministers will gather Sunday to discuss the impact of Donald Trump's election on trans-Atlantic ties and whether it will complicate relations with an increasingly belligerent Russia.

At informal dinner talks in Brussels, well away from the media, the ministers will debate how many of Trump's campaign announcements — like isolationist positions on security, his rejection of international trade pacts and refusal to criticize Russian President Vladimir Putin — might translate into real policy.

Before the dinner, EU diplomats were at a loss to explain Trump's stunning victory or understand yet what it might really mean.

Giovanni Grevi, senior fellow at the European Policy Centre think tank, said that "cooperation between Europe and the U.S. will not become impossible, but it will become much more difficult."

"Donald Trump has been putting America first ... in defining his foreign policy and it seems he is taking a very transactional approach to international affairs. This is very likely to apply also to trans-Atlantic relations," Grevi said.

Given Trump's clear opposition to major trade pacts, EU officials are all but certain that the massive Trans-Atlantic Trade and Investment Partnership, or TTIP, will have to be renegotiated, if any life remains in the project at all.

"With the new president-elect we don't really know what will happen. There is strong reason to believe that there would be a pause in TTIP, that this might not be the biggest priority for the new administration," EU Trade Commissioner Cecilia Malmstrom said Friday.

Perhaps the most pressing problem though is to understand how for renewal in January.

EU leaders are due to discuss them at a summit in Brussels on Dec. 15-16, but any signal from Trump about a softening of U.S. relations with Russia is likely to embolden already reluctant countries like Germany, Italy and others to push for an end the sanctions regime, diplomats said.

SOFIA, Bulgaria — Bulgarians are choosing their new president in a runoff Sunday that may also determine the fate of the country's center-right government.

The new president will face a possible rise in migrants from Turkey and growing tensions between Russia and the West.

The choice is between Gen. Rumex Radev, 53, a former non-partisan chief of the Bulgarian Air Force, backed by the opposition Socialist party, and the speaker of Parliament, Tsetska Tsetscheva, 58, a lawyer and member of

In the first round of voting, Radev came in first with 25 percent of the vote, followed by Tsetscheva with 22 percent.

Bulgaria, which joined the European Union a decade ago, remains the poorest member of the 28-nation bloc. It belongs to NATO and the EU, but many Bulgarians still feel a cultural and historical affinity with Russia, and the country's heavy dependence on Russian energy supplies leaves it vulnerable to meddling by the Kremlin.

Borisov, whose party has trumped in all national elections in the last decade, says he will resist if Tsetscheva loses.

Radev has attracted many Bulgarians who are fed up with corrupt politicians. The former NATO fighter pilot who once studied at the U.S. Air War College in Alabama has pledged to maintain Bulgaria's place in NATO but also says "being pro-European does not mean being anti-Russian."

Tsetscheva, seeking to become Bulgaria's first female president, is expected to continue her party's pro-Europe foreign policy. She has tried to rally other right-wing parties behind her, urging them not to allow "Bulgaria to return to the dark past" of being under Russia's thumb.

Voters chose change, despite the form it took

By ANDREW MALCOLM
Special to McClatchy

In the end, the evening's unfolding I-can't-believe-what-I'm-seeing-soundly magnified Donald Trump's election victory.

But it shouldn't have.

The anger in America's troubled heartland at the political establishment has been brewing for years, beginning with the tea party in 2009. It boiled over in the 2010 midterms, when voters took the House of Representatives from President Barack Obama's Democratic Party.

It boiled over again in 2014, when voters enlarged that Republican majority and gave the Senate to the GOP to stall Obama's far-reaching initiatives.

And in 2016 it emerged again in both parties. Bernie Sanders' primary crowds, votes and victories reflected intense dissatisfaction with Democrats' anointed nominee, Hillary Clinton.

Donald Trump will be the nation's 19th Republican president. But he is only the sixth man elected to the U.S. presidency as his first public office, all of them Republicans or Whigs. Trump defeated 16 other experienced, respected Republican men and a woman.

Trump boasted he was not a politician, though in hindsight the political rookie was better than all the veteran pros. Indeed, being seen as the anti-politician was arguably Trump's strong suit in this hate-Washington era.

Not hard to discern the outsider between the billionaire and the former state's first lady, national first lady, senator, secretary of state and two-time presidential wannabe.

Trump became the default change agent, vowing to drain the Washington swamp, which is actually what part of the nation's capital was in 1790 when Maryland donated the sodden land to the new country.

Clinton was the status quo, only more so, with her close ties to Wall Street and political and financial cronies, as unloaked in daily WikiLeaks emails.

American voters have refused to give Democrats three consecutive White House terms since World War II.

In 1976, ex-Democrat, then-Republican Ronald Reagan vowed to create a new political coalition by convincing millions of blue-collar Democrats they really were conservatives. It worked for two Reagan terms plus one for his vice president, George H.W. Bush.

Trump's victory is similar. His public communication skills were honed through the mass medium of TV, like Reagan, then funneled through social media and mass rallies. At age 70, Trump will supersede Reagan as the oldest incoming president.

Despite derision among political cognoscenti, the New Yorker followed his gut instincts to go after the forsaken Rust Belt with his Washington-is-broken, the system-is-rigged, restore-America-greatness message.

"The forgotten men and women of this country," Trump repeated, "will be forgotten no longer." He won Ohio, Indiana and Pennsylvania, which the GOP had lost since 1988. Trump likely won Michigan, which — don't forget — Sanders shoplifted from Clinton last spring.

And Trump won Wisconsin, which Republicans haven't captured since — wait for it — the 1984 Reagan landslide. Clinton's inexplicable decision not to campaign there at all will form part of Democrats' painful political autopsy these next few years.

"People," said Brian Ballard, a Trump state finance chairman, "entirely underestimated the hunger for change and a true outsider." Further proof of a main Trump point — that both parties and the media in the nation's capital have become woefully out of touch with Americans in flyover country.

Trump driving the staid GOP into populism may or may not outlast his larger-than-life personality. However, House Speaker Paul Ryan offered praise for the new party leader. "Donald Trump heard a voice out in this country that no one else heard," he said.

The win certainly creates a compelling 2017 political dynamic to see whether the imperative for conservative Supreme Court justices, Obamacare repeal or replacement, and other agenda items makes cooperative bedfellows of starkly differing Republican factions and the new commander in chief.

In the end, it turns out, this election was indeed rigged, rigged for change but by Eastern elites but by nearly 59 million scattered, unhappy voters. That's fewer than Clinton got, fewer even than Mitt Romney got in 2012.

As has happened 44 previous times in the past 240 years, voters' collective wisdom produced another imperfect but viable solution to run the nation through the next leap year.

Voters craved White House change more than they wanted the status quo of a third Barack Obama term with Clinton. They wanted change so much they were willing to disregard outrageous Trump remarks and behaviors.

In Congress, however, more than sweeping change voters clearly wanted a status quo, though a narrow one, warning leaders there to produce change, for a change.

Well played, Founding Fathers, well played.

Clinton paid for not addressing her Mich. issues

By DEBBIE DINGELL
Special To The Washington Post

It was the crazy one. I predicted that Hillary Clinton was in trouble in Michigan during the Democratic primary. I observed that Donald Trump could win the Republican nomination for president. And at Rotary clubs, local chambers of commerce, union halls and mosques, I noted that we could see a Trump presidency. "That's Debbie, it's hyperbole, she is nuts."

It's now our reality, and as Americans we need to understand why. My district reflects much of this country's diversity. Ann Arbor is a university- and start-up town. Ypsilanti is urban, and its issues mirror those of larger cities such as Detroit and Chicago. Dearborn is headquarters for Ford Motor Co. and has the largest Muslim population in the country. The "Downriver" — a collection of communities south of Detroit — mean auto plants and manufacturing with strong union membership.

Much of the district is Democratic and those voters strongly supported Bernie Sanders in the primary. That result didn't surprise me, but it did infuriate me that Clinton and her team didn't show up until the weekend before the primary, when it suddenly became clear they had a problem. I took Bill Clinton grocery shopping that Saturday — too little, way too late. They never stopped on a campus; never went to a union hall; never talked to the Arab American community. Sanders was in my district 10 times during the primary. How would any sane person not predict how this one would go? It was fixable for the general election.

From the beginning, I knew the Downriver would support Trump both in the Republican primary and in the general. I witness the emotions and passions of their residents every day, and I believe they are who elected Trump president.

Ordinary working men and women in this country aren't asking for a lot. They want to make a decent living. They want to be able to provide for their family, buy a home in a safe neighborhood, put food on the table, go the doctor when they need to, afford their medicines and educate their children. What many don't understand is how these things are in danger of becoming unattainable for too many Americans.

In my first week as a member of Congress, I flew to Michigan with President Barack Obama to visit an auto plant and see the results of his policies that saved the auto industry and thousands of jobs in Michigan. At the time, I thanked the president profusely for his leadership because I know what would have happened to my state and the country had he not implemented his strong economic plan.

But I would like to thank Mr. President, with all due respect, many of these workers don't translate what you have done to them. They don't feel better off. Their real wages have not risen in decades, and in fact for many it has dropped. They have less purchasing power; their health insurance costs more; they don't trust their pensions to be there; and because we are a cyclical industry, they are frightened that something bad could happen at any time. Add to that, trade deals that they view as shipping jobs overseas and threatening the ones they have here. Top it off with fear about national security and potential threats at workplaces or movie theaters and you have workers who are scared, worried and concerned in their hearts and souls.

The president did save my state's industry. But what many miss is that that working men and women don't see this in their lives. They feel the system is rigged against them. And those workers are white, black, Hispanic, Muslim — all races, creeds and colors. Economic and national security fears overcame all other factors when they walked into the voting booth.

These first days post-election are emotional. My Muslim constituents are terrified; I literally had a shaking 8-year-old sobbing in my arms that she would be killed in school. Black young people on college campuses are stunned and anxious about what their future holds. Women — and as one myself who has multiple stories of inappropriate sexual harassment in the workplace — ponder how to make certain we don't go backward.

One of the biggest challenges we face as a country, not just as a party, is how to make our diversity a strength, not a weakness. We have to come together as Americans first and foremost. After this campaign, that is no easy feat.

Debbie Dingell, a Democrat, represents Michigan's 12th Congressional District in the House of Representatives.

In Oval Office, Trump's task takes shape

By KATHLEEN PARKER

Washington Post Writers Group

WASHINGTON — Wives who tuned in to Donald Trump and Barack Obama's post-election get-together can't have missed the change in the president-elect's demeanor and affect.

Quiet and reserved, he seemed almost chastened. Dare I say, humble, and deferential to the man whose citizenship he challenged by rising up to his candidacy.

The real estate tycoon best known for ego, insults and inventive seemed almost sensitive and earnest, as well as appropriately respectful toward the president and the rare circumstances in which he found himself.

It was... odd.

Was he drugged? Was he too exhausted to rally the showman? Or, was Trump, in fact, feeling the gravity of his accomplishment, the burden of his responsibilities, and the need for sacred aura of his surroundings?

I prefer to think the latter.

As every president learns, there's a world of difference between running for the office and serving as commander in chief. Suddenly, the lure of the contest and the excitement of the campaign replaced with the overwhelming recognition that you are soon to be the leader of the free world.

From reality show to Oval Office is quite an unexpected career path. If Trump promised his fans they'd win so much that they'd get tired of winning, Trump may be weariest of all. Now what?

But there may have been something else at work Thursday when Trump and Obama appeared as presidential pals at a news conference following their hour-and-a-half-long meeting.

That is, the White House itself brings out the reverent in the irreverent. When you step inside, you become a part of something larger than one individual or 320 million souls. You can feel history breathing in those walls. Walking down grand corridors, heels clicking against marble, you pause for a moment to listen to what has been other footfalls behind you.

The business of the free world, the secrets of past administrations, and the collected anguish of all previous presidents who, in secret prayers and earnest intentions, had found themselves failures — all are collected here. No one measures up to the job. Now it's Trump's turn.

The world waits with a thousand questions, principally: Will he really do what he said he would? Will he put Hillary Clinton in jail, build a wall, ban

PABLO MARTINEZ MONSIVIS/AP
President Barack Obama, right, meets with President-elect Donald Trump in the Oval Office of the White House on Thursday.

Muslims and export 11 million immigrants who didn't follow the rules? Will he really repeal and replace Obamacare?

Will he really seek to muzzle the media, abandon NATO or even consider the real nuclear option? Will he return to being the guy who tweets all night and bullies his enemies?

Or will he give the speech of his lifetime, apologizing for his losses if not the pain he caused others? I'd be happy to write it for him.

In the meantime, associates, colleagues and employees — former and current — confirm that Trump is a very mixed bag indeed. An impatient genius who doesn't read but grasps information quickly; a "screamer," by his own description in his book "Think Like a Billionaire"; a hard-charger who doesn't sleep and expects 24/7 availability and loyalty from his employees (and his Cabinet?); a no-b.s. artist who sees through others'. Neither a true Republican nor a Democrat, he is by his own account "an army of one."

Not for long. We hope.

One of his former employees, the optimistically named Louise Sunshine, told The Washington Post that though Trump will be challenged by the demands of the job and the necessity of putting country before ego, "he will do it." Such faith is about all we have for now, but the image of a humble Trump seated next to Obama was a welcome palate changer.

Obviously, Obama is still president and he set the tone — both for the meeting and for the nation to observe. If some Americans haven't liked the cut of his job or the contours of his policies, they have reason to feel pride in a leader who modeled class and dignity worthy of his office.

Likewise, Hillary Clinton last week was a shining example of how to accept defeat and surrender nobly to our democratic system's electoral results, notwithstanding her winning the popular vote.

She, Obama and, yes, even Trump are on their best behavior because, as each has said in her or his own way, the peaceful transfer of power is our solemn duty as citizens and as keepers of civilization's brightest flame.

Let's not blow it.

Trump's VA chief to decide status of Agent Orange cases

By TOM PHILPOTT

Bob McDonald won't be the Department of Veterans Affairs secretary to decide if thousands more Vietnam War veterans — those with bladder cancer, high blood pressure, hypothyroidism or Parkinson's-like symptoms — should be eligible for VA health care and disability pay because of research associating the ailments with possible exposure to Agent Orange or other herbicides used in the war.

The decision to add any of those ailments to the list of conditions the VA already presumes are tied to herbicides will be left for President Donald Trump's VA secretary, department officials told us Wednesday.

"For this administration, the deadline for proposing new rules for potential new presumptions (of service connection to herbicide) has passed, and this will become work for the new administration to take to completion," VA officials said in a written statement.

As reported here in March, McDonald convened a working group of VA senior scientists on a health effort to study the 10th and final biennial review of health problems linked to Vietnam-era herbicides. The Institute of Medicine, a division of the National Academies of Sciences, conducted every review. The latest took account of medical and scientific literature published from Oct. 1, 2012, through Sept. 30, 2014. The IOM's conclusions, which the research supports changing the strength of association to herbicide exposure for several ailments. For bladder cancer and hypothyroidism, it found "limited or suggestive" evidence of a link, an upgrade from "inadequate or insufficient" evidence determined earlier.

Looking again at scientific literature on cardiovascular conditions and herbicides, the IOM didn't upgrade but it did affirm limited or suggestive evidence that herbicides can cause hypertension, or high blood pressure.

MILITARY UPDATE

The IOM also considered whether conditions resulting in Parkinson's-like symptoms, apart from Parkinson's disease itself, should fall into the limited or suggestive category of evidence. Yes, it concluded, finding "no rational basis" for the current exclusion.

The IOM also withdrew an earlier finding that herbicide exposure may have caused spina bifida in children born to Vietnam veterans. For 20 years the VA has recommended in September of an association. Based on newer research, the IOM says it no longer believes the evidence shows service connection.

Dr. Ralph Loren Erickson, chief consultant of post-deployment health services for the Veterans Health Administration, has co-chaired a working group reviewing the recent IOM findings. He predicted last March that McDonald could get final recommendations in time to decide by August whether to expand the Vietnam-era list of presumptive diseases. That didn't happen, however. One official said the group got diverted to other work including the VA's announcement in September of eight diseases linked to contaminants found in the water supply at Camp Lejeune, N.C., before 1988.

An Agent Orange law that Congress allowed to sunset last year would have required the VA secretary to take action on IOM recommendations within 60 days of receiving its report, in this case by last May.

The VA technical work group now expects to have a draft response and action plan on findings of the IOM, renamed the National Academy of Medicine, by early December. The packet then will be given to a VA IOM Task Force before recommendations are made to the secretary. By then, Trump will be president and the VA presumably will have a new secretary.

"Limited or suggestive" epidemiological evidence that a disease is associated with herbicide exposure means a link to increased risk for a health effect. But the term doesn't always produce a decision to presume service connection. For some ailments, including ischemic heart disease, VA secretaries have used "limited or suggestive evidence" to add to the presumptive list of Agent Orange diseases. For others, including hypertension, which is suffered by two-thirds of Americans 65 and older, the same evidence hasn't been seen as strong enough.

VA appeals Staab decision

We reported here last August that more than 2 million claims for VA reimbursement of private-sector emergency health care services since February 2010 could be allowed for veterans enrolled in VA health care, under an July ruling from the U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims in the case of Richard W. Staab v. Robert A. McDonald.

In part because that decision, if allowed to stand, would cost the VA as much as $10.6 billion, the department has filed an appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal District, which could take another year to resolve.

For many years the VA has maintained that, by law, it can reimburse VA-enrolled veterans for outside emergency care only if they have no alternative health insurance including Medicare, Tricare, employer-provided health insurance or contracted health plans. The practical effect has been that veterans with other health insurance get stuck paying hefty out-of-pocket costs their plans won't cover while veterans with no other insurance see the VA routinely pick up their entire emergency care tab.

That irked Congress enough by 2009 that it tried to clarify the law on VA coverage of outside emergency care, adding language that the VA could "reimburse veterans for treatment in a non-VA facility if they have a third-party insurance that would pay a portion of the emergency care."

The change took effect Feb. 1, 2010. But in preparing new regulations, VA officials interpreted the revised law as still preserving its old way of screening most emergency care claims. That was wrong, ruled the appellate claims court last April, citing "plain language" of the revised statute. Last July, the full court upheld the decision.

The VA filed a motion to "stay the precedential effect" of the decision — that is, to not require payment of any previously denied emergency claims, given the "strong likelihood" the decision will be reversed. So the VA has yet paid any emergency care claims Staab would require, explaining that to do so requires new regulations to support a complex claims review process.

Meanwhile, the VA has suspended consideration of tens of thousands of claims for emergency care that it previously would have denied.

The VA estimates that if Staab is not reversed, 68 million more claims for emergency care would be eligible for reimbursement over the next decade.

Powerful quake strikes New Zealand

Magnitude-7.8 temblor triggers tsunami alert

By NICK PERRY
Associated Press

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — A powerful earthquake struck New Zealand's South Island early Monday, shaking residents awake, causing damage to buildings and prompting emergency services to warn people along the coast to move to higher ground to avoid tsunami waves.

The magnitude-7.8 earthquake struck just after midnight in a mostly rural area close to the city of Christchurch, but appeared to be more strongly felt in Wellington, the capital, more than 120 miles to the north. The quake was followed by a number of strong aftershocks.

The quake temporarily knocked out New Zealand's emergency call number, 111, police reported. It caused items to fall from shelves and windows to break in Wellington and forced hundreds of tourists onto the streets as hotels were evacuated. There were no immediate reports of serious injuries in the city.

New Zealand's Ministry of Civil Defence and Emergency Management reported that a tsunami wave struck living in 1.50 a.m., they warned residents living along low-lying areas anywhere along the country's east coast to move to higher ground.

Information from the Pacific Tsunami Warning center indicated that the tsunami waves could be highest around the South Island town of Kaikoura, at about 5 feet. The Hawaii-based center said it did not expect the quake to generate a destructive, Pacific-wide tsunami.

Within New Zealand, there was confusion about the tsunami threat.

The ministry earlier had sent out a message on Twitter saying there was no tsunami threat to the country. But then it sent out another message — "situation has changed - tsunami is possible" — before reporting that a tsunami had hit.

The ministry said people on the coast near the epicenter could expect waves of between 10 and 16 feet.

While there were no immediate reports of any major damage or injuries in Christchurch, the quake brought back memories of a magnitude-6.3 earthquake that struck the city in 2011, destroying much of the downtown area and killing 185 people in one of New Zealand's worst disasters. Monday's quake was centered farther away from Christchurch than the one in 2011, which caused an estimated $25 billion in damage.

As Monday's quake hit, Christchurch resident Hannah Gin had just sat down in her living room to watch a replay of the weekend's All Blacks-versus-Italy rugby match when her house started shaking. Upstairs, her mother let out a scream.

Gin, 24, a lifelong Christchurch resident, is accustomed to quakes, so she said she sat calmly and waited, figuring the rumbling would stop in a few seconds. Instead, the shaking just went on and on — for at least three minutes, according to the clock on her phone, she said.

The quake was far less violent than the one that struck her city in 2011, Gin said, adding that there was no jarring up and down or side to side, just a long, rolling sensation. But it went on for much longer than the typical quakes that strike the area, she said. She was less concerned about running for cover than she was about vomiting from the motion sickness, she said with a chuckle.

"I could hear the sliding door sliding back and forth and we've got washing hanging up and I could see the washing moving," Gin said. "It just kept going and going."

She said that her house, which was damaged in the 2011 quake, did not appear to have sustained any new damage from Monday's quake. She also said she had heard from many of her friends who live in the city, and all were safe.

In Wellington, 132 miles north of the quake's epicenter, power was knocked out in some places, and some windows were smashed and some chimneys collapsed.

The quake was centered 57 miles northeast of Christchurch, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

Prince: Sydney to host 2018 Invictus Games

LONDON — Prince Harry says Sydney will host the 2018 Invictus Games and he is urging wounded military athletes to "bring it."

He made the announcement in a video Saturday that also featured Australian pop singer Kylie Minogue promising the prince "you don't need to tell the Aussies to bring it; it's guaranteed."

Harry was inspired to create the Paralympic-style sporting competition for injured and sick servicemen and servicewomen after his two tours of duty in Afghanistan.

Blast outside church wounds 4 in Indonesia

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Indonesian police said an explosion outside a church on Borneo wounded four children.

National police spokesman Brig. Gen. Agus Riyanto said a number of vehicles were damaged Sunday in the explosion at the parking lot of the Oikumene Church in Samarinda, the provincial capital of East Kalimantan province.

Media reports quoted local police spokesman Lt. Col. Fajar Setiawan as saying the explosion came from a Molotov cocktail thrown by a man riding on a motorbike.

Setiawan is quoted as saying the man was arrested.

The four children were slightly wounded and are being treated at a hospital.

N Netanyahu denies inciting against Rabin

JERUSALEM — Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu denied he incited against Yitzhak Rabin in the months leading up to his 1995 assassination, as the country marked the anniversary of the former leader's killing.

In a Facebook post, Netanyahu seized on the moment and rejected longstanding accusations that he contributed to the climate of violence before Rabin's killing.

"Rabin's assassination was a shocking political assassination that we all renounce. Since the assassination there have been ongoing attempts to distort the historic truth and to attribute the incitement that preceded the assassination to me," he wrote.

Rabin was shot dead after a peace rally on Nov. 4, 1995.

Iran pumps more oil as Saudi officials seek cuts

Iran boosted oil output at three western fields faster than it expected as rival OPEC producer Saudi Arabia called for a collective output cut later this month to help rebalance the market.

Output at the fields west of the Karoun River, near Iran's border with Iraq, rose to about 250,000 barrels per day from 65,000 barrels in 2013, the Oil Ministry's news service, Shana, reported Sunday.

Saudi Arabian Energy Minister Khalid Al-Falih said OPEC must agree to implement a proposal cut in crude production for OPEC countries, the Saudi Press Agency reported Sunday.

US agrees to resettle Australia's refugees languishing on islands

By Rod McGuirk
Associated Press

CANBERRA, Australia — The United States has agreed to resettle an unspecified number of refugees languishing in Pacific island camps in a deal that is expected to inspire more asylum-seekers to attempt to reach Australia by boat, officials said Sunday.

Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull would not say whether he had discussed the deal with President-elect Donald Trump during their telephone conversation on Thursday. The Obama administration had agreed to resettle refugees among almost 1,300 asylum-seekers held at Australia's expense on the island nations of Nauru and Papua New Guinea. Another 370 who came to Australia for medical treatment, then refused to return to the islands, also would be eligible.

"We deal with one administration at a time and there is only one president of the United States at a time," Turnbull told reporters.

Trump has called for a moratorium or tight restrictions on Muslim immigration. Most of the asylum-seekers are Muslims from the Middle East, Africa and Asia.

Secretary of State John Kerry confirmed that the United States had "agreed to consider referrals" from the United Nations refugee agency on Australia's refugees.

"We are going to work to protect vulnerable refugees around the world and will share that responsibility with our friends in the regions that are most affected by this challenge," Kerry told reporters in New Zealand.

Australia refuses to resettle any refugee who has arrived by boat since the date the resettlement policy was announced, July 19, 2013.

Australia pays Nauru and Papua New Guinea to host boat arrivals and has been searching for countries that will resettle them.

Few refugees have accepted offers to resettle in Papua New Guinea and Cambodia because most hope that Australia eventually will take them in.

Any refugee who refuses to go to the U.S. would be given a 20-year visa to stay on Nauru, a tiny, impoverished atoll with a population of 10,000 people, Immigration Minister Peter Dutton said.

The Refugee Council of Australia, an advocacy group, welcomed the deal as a vital first step in ending the indefinite detention of asylum-seekers on the islands. London-based rights group Amnesty International accused Australia of taking "an extreme step in shirking responsibility."

U.S. Department of Homeland Security officials are expected in Australia this week to begin assessing refugees.

Turnbull would not say how many refugees the United States might take, but said the most vulnerable would be given priority.

"Our priority is the resettlement of woman, children and families," Turnbull said. "This will be an orderly process. It will take time. It will not be rushed." Refugees who arrive in the future would not be sent to the United States, he said.

Australian Border Force Commissioner Roman Quaedvlieg said ships had been positioned to turn boats back to Indonesia if asylum-seekers attempt to reach Australia in the hope of being sent to the U.S.

No people-smuggling operation has successfully delivered asylum-seekers to Australia by boat since July 2014.

Refugee Action Coalition spokesman Ian Rintoul said some refugees on Nauru were "hopeful" of resettlement in the United States, but were frustrated by the lack of detail. There seemed no short-term hope for asylum seekers on Papua New Guinea's Manus Island, a male-only camp holding 873 men.

"There are some people who if the United States is offered to them, certainly they will take it," Rintoul said, adding that several would prefer Australia, where they had family.

Kerry says he'll continue anti-global warming efforts

By Nick Perry
Associated Press

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — Secretary of State John Kerry said Sunday he will continue his efforts to implement the Paris Agreement on global warming until the day President Barack Obama leaves office on Jan. 20. Speaking in New Zealand following a trip to Antarctica, Kerry said his administration would continue to do everything possible to meet its responsibility to future generations.

Kerry has long championed climate action but now his legacy is under threat. President-elect Donald Trump has called climate change a hoax and said he would "cancel" U.S. involvement in the landmark Paris deal.

Under the deal, which came into force this month, countries have agreed to limit global warming to 3.6 degrees Fahrenheit above pre-industrial levels. Achieving the goal will require a major shift away from fossil fuels.

Kerry said it would be up to the Trump administration to define itself on climate change. He said that sometimes there is a divide between what is said on the campaign trail and what is done in governance.

But Kerry appeared to take a swipe at Trump when he listed some of the ways in which global warming could already be seen. He said that globally, there were more fires, floods and damaging storms, and sea levels were rising.

"The evidence is mounting in ways that people in public life should not dare to avoid accepting as a mandate for action," Kerry said.

He also made a point of crediting a previous Republican president, George H.W. Bush, with first joining the global effort to address climate change in Rio de Janeiro in 1992.

"Now the world's scientific community has concluded that climate change is happening beyond any doubt. And the evidence is there for everybody to see," Kerry said.

Pro-Russian candidate is favorite in Moldovan presidential run-off

By Corneliu Rusnac
Associated Press

CHISINAU, Moldova — Moldovans are voting in a presidential election Sunday in which the favorite has promised to restore ties with Russia that cooled after the former Soviet republic signed a trade deal with the European Union.

Igor Dodon, a pro-Moscow figure, has tapped into popular anger with corruption under the pro-European government that came to power in 2009, particularly over about $1 billion that went missing from Moldovan banks before 2014 parliamentary elections.

"I voted for the future of the country. I am totally convinced that Moldova has a future. It will be independent, united and sovereign," said Dodon, who heads the opposition Socialists' Party after voting, predicting an easy win.

Dodon says he wants to federalize Moldova to include the breakaway region of Trans-Dniester where more than 1,000 Russian troops are stationed, and his comments about a "united" Moldova alluded to that.

Rival Maia Sandu, an ex-World Bank economist, who ran on an anti-corruption ticket, urged Moldovans to get out and vote. She needs a high turnout to stand a chance of winning. At midday, about 22 percent of the electorate had voted — the same as in the first round.

"If the vote is correct, we will win. ... it is important to be vigilant and not let them steal the vote," she said.

She said that if elected, as the new president, she would appoint "honest, righteous people and good professionals ... this will be the first signal that things change for the better in Moldova."

The former education minister, who heads the Action and Solidarity Party, said the former Soviet republic will have a more prosperous future in the EU.

Dodon, who nearly won the election in the first round two weeks ago and leads in recent polls, has promised to restore friendly relations with Moscow. He also recently has hedged his bets, saying he also seeks good relations with Moldova's neighbors, Romania and Ukraine.

He has been criticized in Ukraine for supporting Crimea, annexed by Russia in 2014, is Russian territory. Russia punished agricultural Moldova with a trade embargo on wine, fruit and vegetables after it signed a trade association deal with the EU in 2014.

FBI: Fake cop sought nude photos from girls

LA NEW ORLEANS — Authorities have arrested a New Orleans man accused of posing as a police officer and demanding that girls send him nude photos.

The FBI New Orleans division said in a news release that Triston Grant, 18, was arrested Thursday on charges of impersonating a police officer and computer-aided solicitation of a minor.

An FBI investigation found that Grant intimidated female minors online, threatening to arrest them if they didn't send him nude pictures of themselves.

Man fined for lying about military service

MT GREAT FALLS — A Montana man who lied about serving in the military in order to have his burglary and theft case assigned to a Veterans Treatment Court has been found in contempt of court.

The Great Falls Tribune reported District Judge Greg Pinski fined Ryan Patrick Morris $300 on Wednesday and ordered him to complete 441 hours of community service with a veterans' service organization — one hour for each Montana veteran killed in the line of duty since the Korean War.

Morris told the court that he had done seven combat tours in Iraq and Afghanistan. His father contacted the Veterans Court in October to say that his son had never served in the military.

Pinski gave Morris a year to complete his community service and required him to inform the organization about why he was sentenced.

Woman sentenced for biting husband's lip

IA SIOUX CITY — A north-west Iowa woman has been given probation and suspended jail time for biting and tearing her husband's lower lip when she feigned desire for a kiss.

The Sioux City Journal reported that Carol Smith, 60, pleaded not guilty Tuesday to domestic abuse assault. A charge of willful injury was dismissed.

Prosecutors say the incident occurred in the couple's Sioux City home on May 24 last year. Police said Smith's husband required plastic surgery.

The judge gave Smith two years of probation, suspended all but 60 days of a 365-day jail sentence and ruled that Smith may serve 120 days on an electronic monitoring device in lieu of serving the jail time. He also fined her $315.

Theft caught on video; stolen reptile returned

NY WEST ISLIP — A Long Island reptile store said a baby snake that was stolen last week has been returned.

Police said earlier that surveillance video captured a man removing a ball python from a drawer and placing it inside his jacket pocket at Repotocia in West Islip in Suffolk County. The man buys several items and then leaves the store with the snake.

The store's owners said the snake is worth several hundred dollars.

Newsday reported the store said in a Facebook post Wednesday afternoon that an anonymous third party returned the snake.

Dispute over flag spurs shooting, arrests

NH MANCHESTER — Police say a dispute about a flag at a home led to a shooting in Manchester and two men arrested.

Police said one of them, Michael Sirois, 22, found the flag offensive Nov. 5. Police didn't describe it, but media reports say it was a play off the old "Don't Tread on Me" flag with a snake. It featured a porcupine, the mascot of the Free State Project.

Police said Jarrod Ean-Dixon, 36, was shot and was hospitalized. A woman who suffered a gunshot wound to the leg was released from the hospital.

Sirois, of Chester, was charged with first-degree assault with a deadly weapon. Jason Gerry, 21, of Sandown, was charged with second-degree assault.

Man pleads guilty in lottery theft case

IA STORM LAKE — A northwest Iowa man pleaded guilty to theft of a lottery ticket or share.

Johnny Long Jr., 26, of Sioux Rapids, entered the plea Nov. 7. He's scheduled to be sentenced Dec. 19.

Prosecutors have said Long's girlfriend, Ashley Bosler, was working at a convenience store when she found a winning ticket by scratching off a corner and scanning the bar code that confirmed it was a winner of a $250,000 prize. Prosecutors said she was 20 at the time — too young to play the game — so Long tried to claim it for her.

Her mother, Sally Bosler, had pleaded not guilty to a charge of aiding and abetting, but prosecutors dropped the charge, saying they didn't have enough evidence to convict her.

NY EAST MORICHES — said an intoxicated driver sped the wrong way along a county road, narrowly missing other cars and a bus.

Southampton Town Police said officers began chasing the driver about 12:40 a.m. Saturday in Northampton. She was going south in the northbound lanes of County Road 51. The pursuing officers drove parallel to her in the southbound lanes.

The driver finally turned onto the correct side of the highway but kept fleeing. After the 6½-mile chase, she pulled over in East Moriches.

Police said Jennifer R. Paterno, of Patchogue, N.Y., and Bloomfield, N.J., was awaiting a court appearance on misdemeanor charges.

Bumblebee with special pollinating skills may soon join endangered species list

By JESSICA ROY
Los Angeles Times

A type of bumblebee native to North America may soon be named to the endangered species list. It would be the first bee species to be considered endangered in the United States.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service formally proposed in September that the Bombus affinis, or rusty patched bumblebee, be listed as endangered under the guidelines of the Endangered Species Act.

"As pollinators, rusty patched bumblebees contribute to our food security and the healthy functioning of our ecosystems," the Fish and Wildlife Service said in a statement.

The federal agency estimates that native insect species, particularly bees, contribute $3 billion in economic value annually in the United States. Because of a specialized pollen-shedding movement called "buzz pollination," bumblebee species are better at pollinating some crops than honeybees.

The Xerces Society for Invertebrate Conservation filed a formal petition in 2013 seeking to place the rusty patched bumblebee on the endangered list. According to the conservation organization, the species' population has declined 87 percent in recent years.

Another Xerces Society petition on Change.org has garnered more than 128,000 signatures this year alone.

The bees' decline can be attributed to habitat loss, climate change, disease, farming and pesticides, according to the Fish and Wildlife Service.

The rusty patched bumblebee — so named for a distinctive colored patch on the abdomens of worker bees — is particularly apt at pollinating cranberries, plums, alfalfa, onion seed and apples. Its life cycle begins earlier in spring and extends later into the fall than most other types of bumblebees.

The species used to be found across at least 26 states in the Midwest and Northeast, in recent years, sightings have shrunk to just a few states, the Xerces Society reported.

Per the rules of the Endangered Species Act, the next step is a 60-day period in which members of the public, scientists and government agencies can submit expert opinions and other input. Comments may be submitted online until Nov. 21.

After that, the Fish and Wildlife Service will announce its decision.

FACES

BY MEREDITH BLAKE
Los Angeles Times

Claire Foy was six months pregnant when she donned a wig and crown to audition for a role as the young Queen Elizabeth II in the Netflix series "The Crown."

"I was just massive and my face had started to do that thing where all my features were stretching," recalls the actress, tugging at her nose and cheeks to demonstrate. "I looked absolutely ridiculous."

With a shaggy bob recently dyed blond, the 32-year-old comes across as the antithesis of stiff-upper-lip British aristocracy, peppering her speech liberally with the word bloody amid occasional exuberant gestures and a tendency to slide into cartoonish voices.

Writer Peter Morgan remembers her audition for "The Crown" differently: "Her talent was undeniable and unmistakable, and my conviction that we had found our queen was immediate. She was electric, even in composure and silence."

Like seemingly all British actors, Foy is well-versed in tasteful period drama, having starred in a BBC adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Little Dorrit" and in the recent revival of "Upstairs Downstairs." She even played a very different sort of queen, Anne Boleyn, in last year's miniseries "Wolf Hall."

The 10-episode first season of "The Crown" follows the early years of Elizabeth's long reign, opening on the eve of her marriage to Prince Philip (Matt Smith from "Doctor Who") in 1947, then jumping ahead to 1952, when at the age of 25, she unexpectedly ascends to the throne after the death of her father, King George VI (Jared Harris).

Though much has been made of the series' sumptuous production value and reported $100 million budget, "The Crown" is a psychologically astute portrait of the tension between the public sovereign and the private person. As figurehead, Elizabeth has great symbolic power but little autonomy; she is unable to choose her last name or even the home where her family, which then included two small children, will reside.

"It's not all twinkle, twinkle, twinkle and look at all the finery," Foy says. "It's what's going on between people."

The drama explores Elizabeth's fraught relationships with aging prime minister Winston Churchill (John Lithgow); her uncle, the Duke of Windsor

Claire Foy plays the young princess who inherits the British throne after her father dies in the Netflix series "The Crown."

'It's not all twinkle'

For lead, 'The Crown' is more than the finery

(Alex Jennings), who famously abdicated the throne; and her only sister, Princess Margaret (Vanessa Kirby), whose romance with the divorced Peter Townsend (Ben Miles) led to scandal.

Elizabeth's new responsibilities also put enormous strain on her marriage to Philip. Often caricatured as a politically incorrect toff, the Duke of Edinburgh is portrayed with surprising sympathy by Smith as a dashing young naval officer emulated by his role as consort to the queen. "Literally, people would look past him at his wife. Yeah, it's the 1950s, blah-blah, but even now people would struggle with that," Foy says.

For an actress like Foy, whose job is to emote, playing a character like Elizabeth, whose job is to be inscrutable, represents a paradox. Foy did extensive research, reading biographies of the queen and poring over old home movies, but with Elizabeth there are only so many revealing details to be gleaned. "All the people who are closest to her would never speak to anyone. You're sort of doomed in that there is no way in," she says. "So you just have to do the thing where you go OK, I'm a girl of a certain age, of a certain background, these are my interests, this is the person I want to marry and then just flesh it out."

Foy also relied on insight from Stephen Daldry, who directed several episodes, and Morgan, who has spent much of the past decade dramatically exploring the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Morgan also wrote the 2006 film "The Queen," for which Helen Mirren won an Oscar, and the play "The Audience," which netted the actress a Tony last year. (Each season of the planned series will cover roughly a decade of British history.)

Despite all the accolades, Foy wasn't daunted by Mirren's celebrated portrayals simply because she sees her version of the queen as a very different character. "You aren't the same person at 25 that you are at 75," says the actress, wearing a cozy oatmeal sweater and denim miniskirt. "Life doesn't work like that." The monarch at the center of "The Crown" is a relatively sheltered young woman "coming to terms with her duty, with what her job is, and how to bloody do it" while also grieving her beloved father.

The role forced Foy to consider Elizabeth anew. "I'd never really registered the fact that in an order for her to become queen, her dad had to die," she says. "The one person who could tell you how to do the job is dead, and everyone is looking to you to know what to do, and you're terrified. But she just keeps calm and carries on, and that's it, really. That's the story of her life."

Singer-songwriter and poet Leonard Cohen, best known for 'Hallelujah,' dies

Associated Press

Leonard Cohen, the baritone-voiced Canadian singer-songwriter who seamlessly blended spirituality and sexuality in songs including "Hallelujah," "Suzanne" and "Bird on a Wire," has died at age 82.

A memorial will take place in Los Angeles at a later date, Catherine McNelly, a representative from his record label, said Nov. 10. No further details on his death were given.

Cohen, also renowned as a poet, novelist and aspiring Zen monk, blended folk music with a darker, sexual edge that won him fans around the world and among fellow musicians like Bob Dylan and R.E.M. He remained widely popular into his 80s. He toured as recently as earlier this year and released a new album, "You Want It Darker," just last month.

His "Hallelujah" went from cult hit to modern standard, now an unending staple on movies, TV shows, YouTube videos, reality shows and school choir concerts. Cohen rose to prominence during the folk music revival of the 1960s.

It was Dylan who first recognized the potential of 1984's "Hallelujah," performing it twice in concert during the mid-1980s, once in Cohen's native Canada.

It had gone unnoticed when it came out on an independent-label album that had been rejected by Cohen's label. He had filled a notebook with some 80 verses before recording the song, which he said despite its religious references to David, Bathsheba and Samson was an attempt to give a nonreligious context to hallelujah, an expression of praise. Cohen recorded four verses, but he sent several more to John Cale, a founding Velvet Underground member who recorded "Hallelujah" for a 1991 tribute album. It's the Cale version that has become the standard and was used by its most celebrated singer, the late Jeff Buckley, whose 1994 recording really began the launch of the song as cultural phenomenon.

Cohen was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2008.

Very few areas have no racial wage gap

By TIM HENDERSON
StateLine.org

WASHINGTON — The income gap between black and white households has grown since 2000 and only worsened since the recession.

In 2015, the median income for black households was 59.5 percent of that for whites, or $36,544 to $61,394. That's a greater gap than at the end of the recession in 2009, when black income was 61.2 percent of white income.

Yet, a tiny number of places exist where black household income is greater than that of whites. Of the 364 large U.S. counties whose populations are at least 5 percent black, there are seven, according to a StateLine analysis of U.S. Census Bureau American Community Survey data for 2010-14.

Among them: Stafford County, Va., an exurban bedroom community of Washington and home to military installations, where many black families find contract work or commute to government jobs in the nation's capital.

The typical black household there earned an average of $105,628 from 2010 through 2014, the highest income of the seven counties. White households earned an average of $99,533 during that time. Washington, by contrast, had one of the biggest gaps in the nation — black household income was $40,829, little more than a third of the $115,109 for white households.

In Fayette County and Clayton County, Ga., suburbs of Atlanta, black households made $83,396 and $41,292 respectively compared with white household incomes of $80,500 and $40,231. In nearby Fulton County, which includes Atlanta, black households made $35,407 compared with whites' $88,279 — or just 40 percent of what white households made.

And in Kendall County, Ill., a Chicago suburb, black households made $96,146 compared with the $89,236 of whites. In Chicago's Cook County the $34,935 black median household income was less than half that of whites.

Blacks' higher income compared with whites' in those exurban counties is an anomaly in a nation where income disparity has grown. Pay for blacks, relative to whites, has been shrinking since 2000, according to a study earlier this year by the left-leaning Economic Policy Institute. Black men make 77 percent less than similarly qualified whites, and black women make 11.7 percent less than white women, the study found.

Besides higher earning power, white households have 13 times the net worth of black households — a gap that has also grown since the recession, according to a Pew Research Center study this year. (The Pew Charitable Trusts funds both the Pew Research Center and StateLine.)

In those areas with the highest black income — Kendall County, Ill.; Stafford County, Va.; and Fayette County, Ga. — college education rates are high for blacks and whites. Marriage rates also are high, which results in more two-income families that can afford some of the expensive homes there.

College education creates job opportunities, but doesn't fully explain or solve the black-white income gap, according to the EPI study. Pay for new black male college graduates, for example, is 18 percent below that for white male grads.

The greatest similarities may be their proximity to core urban areas and high-paying corporate or government jobs, as well as their supply of affordable, albeit expensive, homes and good schools.

Valerie Wilson, of EPI, said affluent black families may have had to move farther from cities to find the good housing and schools they seek because the black middle class, with less net worth, cannot afford rising housing prices in the cities or private schools.

HIGH SCHOOL: DODEA PACIFIC

ASIJ dethrones Kadena in D-I football

By DAVE ORNAUER
Stars and Stripes

TOKYO — The defense continually came up with big plays to keep Kadena's vaulted ground game hemmed in. And Jack Ambrosino took care of the offensive end Saturday for American School In Japan.

The junior quarterback passed for two first-half touchdowns and ran for two second-half scores, leading the Mustangs to a 35-18 victory to dethrone the two-time defending Division I champion.

ASIJ (7-1) won the title in just its second year of eligibility and now has won DODEA Pacific Far East titles in every sport except softball.

"It feels great. We're excited about it," said John SeEVERS, in his 40th season coaching the ASIJ football program, 33 as head coach.

Many of the same players on the ASIJ team that went just 3-4 playing a full D-I schedule for the first time last season now have the Pacific's biggest prize.

"This has been an absolutely fantastic group," SeEVERS said. "They had an unbelievable work ethic. The character has been unprecedented."

Kadena (6-2) fell short of winning its third straight title. The Panthers held a record nine D-I title games and have a Pacific-6 five titles, but lost for the second time in four years.

"These guys are my heroes," coach Sergio Mendoza said. "They got to where they needed to be. We just got beat by a better team. They out-tackled us, they out-performed us, they out-disciplined us. We made too many mistakes and against a team like that, you can't make that many mistakes."

It was an ASIJ team featuring a defense that held the Panthers to 216 yards. While Kadena turned over the ball only once, the Mustangs kept short-circuiting Panthers drives with clutch open-field tackles.

Seniors Dalan Gerber and Stone Damon and sophomore Oliver Rogers each recorded three tackles for losses and senior Coe Laughlin one.

"This is something we've been working on all season," Laughlin said. "Every practice, we worked on open-field tackling. At first we weren't very good at it, but we worked on it and I think we finally got the hang of it."

"We just went after it, worked our butts off this whole season, this whole two weeks leading up to this game to prepare," Damon said. "We knew if we could keep them off the scoreboard, our offense was going to put up some points."

That job fell largely to Ambrosino, now 10-2 as a starter since taking over midway through last season.

He accounted for just 94 yards, but threw touchdown strikes of 53 yards to Jo Tsusaka and 23 to Laughlin out of the backfield in the first half.

"Those were very short passes and the great plays were made by my receivers," Ambrosino said.

In the third quarter, Ambrosino added short touchdown runs, of 1 and 2 yards.

Kadena took a 6-0 lead on Uriah Morris' 3-yard TD run, capping an 11-play, 66-yard opening drive. That drive featured Morris' 22-yard run on a fake punt.

A key moment came just four minutes before halftime when ASIJ punted. But Kadena's Owen Sinning couldn't secure the ball and ASIJ's Michael Taylor fell on it, setting up Laughlin's TD catch and a 14-6 margin at the half.

Ambrosino's 1-yard TD run 2:46 into the third quarter increased ASIJ's lead to 21-6. The Panthers answered on the next possession with Morris' 4-yard scoring run, slicing the margin to nine points.

A screen pass to Rogers on ASIJ's next drive set up Ambrosino's 2-yard keeper. Tsusaka capped ASIJ's scoring with a 4-yard run with 7:45 left.

Kadena scored the last points on a 64-yard, 13-play drive in 6:36, featuring a Cody Segó 29-yard pass on another fake punt to Abe Patterson. Segó capped the drive with a 7-yard keeper, then ASIJ ran out the clock.

Asked if this was his last game with the Mustangs, SeEVERS, who has been rumored to be retiring, was noncommittal. "I don't know," he said, adding that he has until Dec. 1 to decide. But he did add about ASIJ as a team: "We'll be back next year and we'll be chasing the grill."

Blue Devils guards lead way in win

Allen, Jefferson help No. 1 Duke beat Grand Canyon

By JOEY MCCREARY
Associated Press

DURHAM, N.C. — With three big men out with injuries, top-ranked Duke is leaning on its guards for a little bit of everything. Grayson Allen had 25 points and 10 rebounds, freshman Frank Jackson added 21 points and the Blue Devils beat Grand Canyon 96-61 on Saturday.

“We have to rebound — the whole perimeter has to rebound,” said Allen, who finished one rebound shy of his career best. “We know the big guys that we do have in the game, they’re going to be battling, boxing out the other bigs, so the perimeter, we need to crash in and rebound and clean up all the loose stuff.”

Amile Jefferson scored 15 points, Luke Kennard finished with 14 and Matt Jones had 11 points for the short-handed Blue Devils (2-0).

Once again playing without three injured freshman post players, they kept things largely in their guards’ hands and shot 53 percent to win their second game in less than 24 hours. “I like my team a lot. We just have to keep getting better, and then once all these injuries are taken care of in some time, we can become a different team,” coach Mike Krzyzewski said. “Right now, we have to be this team and not think about who we could be. Our complete focus has got to be how to win with this team.”

Now, with those two tweek games out of the way, the four are finally full on one of the marquee matchups of the early season: a date with No. 3 Kansas on Tuesday night at Madison Square Garden.

GERRY BROOME/AP

Duke’s Frank Jackson, left, and Grayson Allen, right, defend Grand Canyon’s Fifth Aidoo on Saturday in Durham, N.C. Duke won 96-61.

Shaq Carr had 18 points to lead pesky Grand Canyon (0-1), which gave Duke more of a test than Marist did in a 94-49 rout a night earlier but came up empty in its second opener against a top-ranked team in three years.

Poll implications: The Blue Devils trailed for the first time this season but once again showed no reason why they should be ranked any lower than No. 1.

The Colangelo connection: Both coaches have strong ties to Jerry Colangelo. He was the Phoenix Suns’ owner when he drafted Dan Majerle in 1988 and lured “Thunder Dan” to the Grand Canyon program in 2013.

And with Colangelo as its chairman and Duke’s Mike Krzyzewski as the coach, the U.S. national team won the last three Olympic gold medals.

Stat watch: The Blue Devils were 21-for-31 from the free-throw line while Grand Canyon was 6-for-12. The Antelopes didn’t attempt their first foul shot until just 1:44 remained in the first half — by which point Duke had already attempted 17 and built a 39-28 lead.

Busch wins Xfinity race, inaugural Chase field set

AVONDALE, Ariz. — Kyle Busch won for the 10th time in the Xfinity Series this season with a victory at Phoenix International Raceway on the night NASCAR’s second-tier series’ set its inaugural championship field.

NASCAR this season rolled out the Chase for its lower two national series with the same elimination format as the Sprint Cup Series. All four spots in the title race were up for grab Saturday night and all eight drivers had a shot at a slot.

Daniel Suarez and Erik Jones, both driving for Joe Gibbs Racing, will race for the title next weekend at Homestead-Miami Speedway. Also in the field are Justin Allgaier and Elliott Sadler.

Busch is racing Sunday for a spot in Cup’s final four, and new rules will make him ineligible to race in any Chase races in a lower series next year.

Otani shows off bat with disappearing hit

TOKYO — Japanese pitcher Shohei Otani added to his reputation as a powerful hitter on Sunday when he hit a fly ball that didn’t come down.

Otani’s towering fly ball in the seventh inning of an exhibition game against the Netherlands got lodged somewhere in the roof of Tokyo Dome.

As Otani rounded the bases, teammates, opposition players and fans looked up in search of the ball that disappeared into the panels lining the ceiling of the domed stadium.

What certainly would have been a home run in an open-air stadium was ruled a ground-rule double.

While Otani is widely regarded as one of the best pitchers in the world, he is proving his batting abilities are just as impressive. The 6-foot-4 righthander hit 22 home runs this season for the Nippon Ham Fighters.

Sprinter Bolt to train with Borussia Dortmund

DORTMUND, Germany — Borussia Dortmund’s chief has confirmed that nine-time Olympic sprint champion Usain Bolt will practice with the Bundesliga team.

Hans-Joachim Watzke tells Kicker magazine on Sunday that “it was no joke” and “not a marketing move.”

Watzke was responding to a report in a Guardian newspaper that Bolt planned to train with Dortmund, one of the top Bundesliga teams.

Dortmund and Bolt are both sponsored by the same Germany-based sports goods company — Puma, whose president contacted Dortmund to say that Bolt had asked about training with the team.

Watzke said he welcomed the idea and that Dortmund coach Thomas Tuchel also looked forward to it. Watzke said the timing of the practice remains to be determined.

Asked if Bolt could have a future in Dortmund, Watzke replied, “we don’t even need to talk about it.” — Associated Press

First: McGregor delivers on New York stage

FROM BACK PAGE

McGregor, also UFC’s featherweight champ following a 13-second knockout of Jose Aldo, had predicted a fourth-round KO.

Unlike UFC’s laborious legal battle to reach New York, McGregor wouldn’t make anyone wait.

UFC has not decided if McGregor (21-3) will be allowed to defend both championships. UFC President Dana White said McGregor could be about the only fighter in the promotion to handle that kind of grueling fight load.

“Who knows,” White said. “I’m going to let him enjoy his night.”

McGregor crouched inside the cage waiting for the bell to ring and attack Alvarez (28-5). McGregor was the clear aggressor from the start, dropping Alvarez three times in the first round. Alvarez, out of Philadelphia, bounced up the first two times and took a severe beating on the third. McGregor forced Alvarez to fight with his back to the cage and never absorbed a serious strike.

The 28-year-old McGregor put his hands behind his back in the second, taunting and toying Alvarez to hit him. McGregor, UFC’s biggest box office star, unloaded a left and ended the fight at 1:52 of the second. McGregor lay waste to a battered Alvarez and brazenly demanded in a speech peppered with profanities his second UFC championship belt.

“I was literally losing my head in there,” he said.

McGregor snatched his new lightweight championship belt, paired it with his featherweight title, and UFC’s first two-class champion in the promotion’s history plopped himself on top of the cage and absorbed the scene of his historic night.

“I’ve spent a lot of time slaying everybody in the company,” McGregor said.

Alvarez is the latest victim on the list.

“Eddie is a warrior but he shouldn’t be in there with me,” he said. “I’m at a different level. Now, I celebrate as champion of two divisions.”

UFC was live and legal in New York for the first time since an MMA ban was lifted earlier this year.

To celebrate, UFC stacked the card with three title fights that set a promotion and MSG gate record with $177 million. The 1999 boxing match between Lennox Lewis and Evander Holyfield drew a record $13.5 million.

“Jesus is going to have to fight the devil to break that record,” White said.

Tyron Woodley defeated Stephen Thompson via majority draw to retain his welterweight title in a fantastic fight and Joanna Jedrzejczyk successfully defended her UFC women’s strawweight championship with a unanimous decision win over Karolina Kowalkiewicz.

But the New York stage belonged to McGregor.

McGregor, as he had been all week in New York, was the undisputed star of the card. McGregor’s fans swathed themselves in Irish flag capes and his fellow countrymen sang “Ole Ole Ole” in the concourse and stands throughout the show.

“It was obvious the crowd was here to see Conor McGregor,” Woodley said.

McGregor told reporters after the fight he wanted an equity stake in UFC.

“Whoever runs this place now has to come to me and give me my slice,” McGregor said. “Bring me on board for real. I need to be set for life on this.”

Top 25 faced

- 1 Alabama (10-0) beat Mississippi State 51-3. At Tuscaloosa, Ala., Jalen Hurts passed for career highs of 347 yards and four touchdowns and rushed for 100 yards in less than three quarters in Alabama's victory. The freshman quarterback's performance wiped out any concerns that the Crimson Tide would have a letdown after a bruising win at No. 19 LSU.
Next: vs. Chattanooga, Saturday.
- 2 Michigan (9-1) lost to Iowa 14-20. At Iowa City, Iowa, freshman Keith Duncan kicked a 33-yard field goal as time expired and Iowa damaged the Wolverines' playoff hopes.
See story on Page 31.
Next: vs. Indiana, Saturday.
- 3 Clemson (9-1) lost to Pittsburgh 42-42. Chris Boswell kicked a 49-yard field goal with 6 seconds left and visiting Pittsburgh stunned Clemson, spoiling a record-setting day for quarterback Deshaun Watson and complicating the Tigers' path back to the College Football Playoff.
See story on Page 31.
Next: at Wake Forest, Saturday.
- 4 Washington (9-1) lost to Southern Cal 26-13. At Seattle, Sam Darnold threw for 287 yards and two touchdowns and Southern California snapped the Huskies' 12-game winning streak and damaged their College Football Playoff hopes.
See story on Page 31.
Next: vs. Arizona State, Saturday.
- 5 Louisville (9-1) beat Wake Forest 44-12. Brandon Riddick ran for three touchdowns during Louisville's 41-point second half, and the host Cardinals routed Wake Forest despite a relatively quiet night from Lamar Jackson.
Next: at Houston, Thursday.

- 6 Ohio State (9-1) beat Maryland 62-3. J.T. Barrett accounted for four touchdowns, Curtis Samuel scored three TDs and visiting Ohio State enjoyed another lopsided victory.
Next: at Michigan State, Saturday.
- 7 Wisconsin (8-2) beat Illinois 48-7. At Madison, Wis., Corey Clement ran for 123 yards and three touchdowns and Wisconsin intercepted four of Illinois quarterback Jeff George Jr.'s passes.
Next: at Purdue, Saturday.
- 8 Auburn (7-3) lost to Georgia 13-7. At Athens, Ga., Rodrigo Blankenship kicked two fourth-quarter field goals and Georgia's defense shut down Auburn in the second half. The loss ended Auburn's Southeastern Conference championship hopes and knocked the Tigers out of consideration for a spot in the playoff.
Next: vs. Alabama A&M, Saturday.
- 9 Oklahoma (8-2) beat No. 25 Baylor 45-24. At Norman, Okla., Baker Mayfield passed for 300 yards and two touchdowns and ran for another score. The Sooners won their seventh in a row overall and 15th straight in Big 12 play. Joe Mixon had 187 yards from scrimmage and Samaje Perine ran for 100 yards and two touchdowns after missing three games with a pulled muscle in his right leg.
Next: at No. 11 West Virginia, Saturday.
- 10 Texas A&M (7-3) lost to Mississippi 29-28. Shea Patterson threw for 338 yards and two TDs in his debut and Gary Wunderlich made a 39-yard field goal with 37 seconds left to lift visiting Mississippi. The Rebels pulled the red-shirt off Patterson, the highly regarded recruit, to start in place of Chad Kelly.
Next: vs. UTSA, Saturday.

- 11 West Virginia (8-1) beat Texas 24-20. At Austin, Texas, Kennedy McCoy ran for two touchdowns and West Virginia's defense withstood a final pass attempt into the end zone. Skyler Howard passed for 259 yards and a touchdown to help West Virginia keep its conference title hopes alive.
Next: vs. No. 9 Oklahoma, Saturday.
- 12 Penn State (8-2) beat Indiana 45-31. Saquon Barkley ran for two go-ahead touchdowns in the fourth quarter, helping Penn State beat host Indiana. Barkley was held to 20 yards on 20 carries through the first three quarters. But the Big Ten's top rusher stepped up in the final period.
Next: at Rutgers, Saturday.
- 13 Utah (8-2) beat Arizona State 49-26. Thursday. Joe Williams had another big game in his post-retirement tour and Utah had 11 sacks among its 22 tackles for loss.
Next: vs. Oregon, Saturday.
- 14 Western Michigan (10-0) beat Kent State 37-21. Tuesday. The Broncos are the highest-ranked MAC school in the AP Top 25 poll since 2008 and have their sights on a major bowl bid. They moved to No. 21 in the past week's CFP rankings.
Next: vs. Buffalo, Saturday.
- 15 North Carolina (7-3) lost to Duke 28-27, Thursday. Duke waited until it was time to play the Tar Heels to finally cut out all the mistakes that kept haunting the Blue Devils in close losses.
Next: vs. The Citadel, Saturday.

- 16 Colorado (8-2) beat Arizona 49-24. Sefo Lulua passed for three touchdowns and ran for another, helping Colorado roll over host Arizona for its first four-game winning streak in 14 years. Colorado had no trouble with the banged-up Wildcats, finding the offensive rhythm that had been missing the past two weeks.
Next: vs. No. 23 Washington State, Saturday.
- 17 Oklahoma State (8-2) beat Texas Tech 45-44. Clayton Hatfield missed the extra point after Quinton White's 1-yard scoring run for visiting Texas Tech with 1:39 left, and Oklahoma State escaped with the victory. Texas Tech appeared to have overcome a 10-point deficit when White spun into the end zone on third-and-goal, but Hatfield's kick sailed wide right.
Next: at TCU, Saturday.
- 18 Virginia Tech (7-3) lost to Georgia Tech 30-20. Georgia Tech backup quarterback Matthew Jordan rushed for 121 yards and two touchdowns to lead the visiting Yellow Jackets.
Next: at Notre Dame, Saturday.
- 19 LSU (6-3) beat Arkansas 49-20. Derrius Guice rushed for a career-high 252 yards, Leonard Fournette added three touchdowns and visiting LSU improved to 4-1 under interim coach Ed Orgeron.
Next: vs. No. 22 Florida, Saturday.
- 20 Florida State (7-3) beat Boston College 45-7, Friday. The Seminoles took advantage of a timely visit for their most complete game of the season.
Next: at Syracuse, Saturday.

- 21 Nebraska (8-2) beat Minnesota 24-17. At Lincoln, Neb., Tommy Armstrong Jr. led a 91-yard tiebreaking touchdown drive after being helped off the field with an ankle injury the previous series, and Kieron Williams' interception with 1:29 left secured Nebraska's victory.
Next: vs. Maryland, Saturday.
- 22 Florida (7-2) beat South Carolina 20-7. At Gainesville, Fla., Austin Appleby threw two touchdown passes, Jordan Scarlett ran for a career-high 134 yards and Florida beat former coach Will Muschamp, moving closer to clinching the Southeastern Conference's Eastern Division.
Next: at No. 19 LSU, Saturday.
- 23 Washington State (8-2) beat California 56-21. Luke Falk threw five TD passes, including three to River Craft, and host Washington State got its eighth consecutive victory. The surging Cougars have their longest winning streak since 1990 and are on a surprising quest for a Pac-12 championship.
Next: at Colorado, Saturday.
- 24 Boise State (9-1) beat Hawaii 52-16. Brett Rypien passed for 338 yards and four touchdowns for Boise State, which racked up a season-high 603 yards of total offense, 403 of them coming before halftime.
Next: vs. UNLV, Friday.
- 25 Baylor (6-3) lost to No. 9 Oklahoma 45-24. Baylor quarterback Seth Russell appears to be lost for the season. He severely dislocated his left ankle and was carted off the field with 5:48 left in the third quarter.
Next: vs. Kansas State, Saturday.

Iowa shocks No. 2 Michigan on late FG

BY LUKE MEREDITH
Associated Press

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Michigan failed its first major road test of the season.

It might not matter for the Wolverines and their playoff hopes — if they win out.

Freshman Keith Duncan kicked a 33-yard field goal as time expired and Iowa stunned second-ranked Michigan 14-13 on Saturday night, damaging the Wolverines' playoff hopes.

“We just have to look in the mirror and look at the film and become better because of this,” Michigan tight end Jake Butt said. “There’s really no excuse, there’s absolute-ly no excuse.”

But Michigan is still very much alive, in part because No. 3 Clemson and No. 4 Washington lost earlier in the day — at home, no less.

Still, it's the middle of November and the Wolverines have yet to beat a team with more than one league win on the road.

Wilton Speight threw for 103 yards with a pick for the Wolverines, who gained just 201 yards of offense.

“We didn’t make enough plays to extend

Did you know

drives, first downs. We missed on some deep throws,” Michigan coach Jim Harbaugh said. “Every little thing doesn’t always go your way, and to win, you’ve got to make it that way.”

Akrum Wadley had 115 yards rushing to help the Hawkeyes (6-4, 4-3 Big Ten) beat a top-five team for the first time in six years.

Michigan (9-1, 6-1, No. 3 CFP) appeared to have the game wrapped up when Channing Stripling intercepted C.J. Beathard's pass with 1:54 left. But the Hawkeyes stuffed the Wolverines, and a facemask penalty put Iowa at Michigan's 36 with 1:23 to go.

Duncan then drilled the ball through the uprights from nearly the exact same spot where Daniel Murray hit the winner eight years ago to knock Penn State out of the national title picture.

“It was an incredible feeling,” said Duncan, who was immediately mobbed by teammates and fans. “It’s definitely the biggest kick I’ve had.”

Pol implications: It’s hard to see Michigan falling further than fourth in the Top 25. One-loss Louisville and Ohio State could jump past the Wolverines, but all that matters is being in the top four when the playoff committee makes its selections.

History repeats itself: Duncan’s big kick was not only reminiscent to 2008, but 1985 — and Michigan was involved in that one. In what is remembered as perhaps the biggest game in the history of Kinnick Stadium, top-ranked Iowa beat No. 2 Michigan 12-10 on a field goal at the final whistle.

The Hawkeyes were later knocked off by Ohio State — and if the same happens to Michigan on Nov. 26, it can likely forget about the playoffs.

USC snaps No. 4 Huskies' streak

SEATTLE — Adoree' Jackson sprinted into the purple end zone, planted his feet and flipped backward, perfectly sticking the landing.

Southern California celebrated its biggest victory of the season with style and flash Saturday night.

Sam Darnold threw for 287 yards and two touchdowns and USC upset No. 4 Washington 26-13 on Saturday night, snapping the Huskies' 12-game winning streak and damaging their College Football Playoff hopes.

Darnold was outstanding against one of the top defenses in the Pac-12, showing why USC has surged since he became the starter. Darnold's lofted pass over linebacker D.J. Beavers and into the arms of tight end Daniel Imatorbhehe for an 8-yard touchdown strike in the opening moments of the fourth quarter gave USC an 11-point lead that Washington (9-1, 6-1 Pac-12, No. 4 CFP) couldn't overcome.

“To play that game, at this age, in that atmosphere? Unbelievable,” USC coach Clay Helton said.

Ronald Jones II added 93 yards rushing and a touchdown. USC (7-3, 6-2, No. 20 CFP) won its sixth straight and should get back into the AP Top 25 while keeping alive its hopes of winning the Pac-12 South.

Washington coach Chris Petersen cautioned all week that USC was back to looking like the most talented team in the Pac-12 and he was proved correct. Darnold flustered Washington's defense by keeping plays alive with his feet and found gaps in the Huskies' secondary that have been difficult for others to find.

“If guys are looking down the horizon, you’re going to get hit right between the eyes,” Petersen said. “There’s too many good players and coaches in this league. ... I think we played a good team tonight.”

Darrels Rogers had six catches for 84 yards and a touchdown, while Imatorbhehe added five catches for 78 yards.

“When you have great players in front of you ... it’s your job to get them the ball and find the open guy. I thought I did that pretty well tonight,” Darnold said.

Washington quarterback Jake Browning was 17-for-36 for 259 yards, including a 70-yard TD pass to John Ross.

Pitt thrilled to play spoiler vs. Clemson

CLEMSON, S.C. — James Conner's smile said it all — Pittsburgh was happy to once again shuffle up the national championship picture.

“Hey, sorry to do that. But we wanted this one bad,” said Conner, who had two touchdowns and ran for 132 yards in the Panthers' 43-42 stunner over No. 3 Clemson on Saturday.

“We’ll remember this one forever,” Conner said.

So, too, will Clemson (9-1, 6-1 Atlantic Coast Conference) which saw its run at perfection halted after escaping so many other jams this season. A fourth-down stop a yard shy saved the Tigers' 42-36 win over No. 5 Louisville on Oct. 1. North Carolina State's missed field goal at the end of regulation boosted Clemson to a 24-17 overtime win.

This time, it was the Panthers (6-4, 3-3) who made the critical plays.

When Clemson was driving for a touchdown already up 42-34, linebacker Saleem Brightwell picked off quarterback Deshaun Watson — his third interception — and returned it 70 yards to set up a 20-yard TD by Conner that drew Pitt within 42-40.

When Clemson attempted to run out the clock, the Panthers' defense (despite allowing 630 yards) stuffed Wayne Gallman a yard short on third and fourth downs to take over near midfield with 58 seconds left.

“We had a chance to put the game away and they stopped us,” Clemson coach Dabo Swinney said. “We had been making those kinds of plays this year.”

Nathan Peterman moved Pitt to the Clemson 30 and Blewitt steadily knocked through.

It was Pitt's highest-ranked win since defeating Backyard Brawl rival, No. 2 West Virginia, 13-9 in 2007 and spoiling the Mountaineers' chances at playing for the national title.

“Our team had a lot of guts tonight,” Narduzzi said.
