HEY GOOD LOOKIN', THE MUSEUM NEEDS KUCHEN!

FEATHERS IN THE WIND

I hope that you will take this the right way, and not as coming from some sentimental fool speaking nonsense.

The other day, I tuned into the middle of a show in which a man was in the hospital and quite anxious. Twice, he had some serious anxiety attacks, and someone came and held him, speaking calmly to him.

Those of you who know me very well are aware that I do not suffer from depression so much as anxiety. It is very real and paralyzing. People may say to someone who is anxious to "get a grip" or, in terms of medical professionals, prescribe medication. These are all just placebos, however, for something that is very real and that needs to be addressed with calmness and compassion.

Here, in Amana, you do not see people hugging one another often, and that is sad. A hug, squeeze of the hand, even someone caressing a cheek, helps an anxious person.

Years ago, I had claustrophobia so badly that I could not ride in an elevator or be in large crowds and insisted on only riding in a car that I, my father, or my husband, drove. This is an anxiety that has gotten better, over time, but that is still present.

Many people suffer anxieties of one form or another, and they are very real. The important thing is that others recognize when these individuals are hurting and show them the calming compassion that helps to make them feel more secure.

Amana's Maipole Dancers Twirl

Sunday afternoons while the rest of us are working in our yards, fishing or otherwise having a day off, our dedicated Amana Colony folk dancers are preparing for Maifest. This year Maifest is May 4 – 5.

The group of more than 25 Amana Colony young women and teens, practices weekly (or more often as needed) to prepare for the annual spring festival.

Maipole dancing may have been a Roman or a German Bavarian tradition (historians are quite certain) but we know that it spread from Bavaria to include other German states, Scandinavia, Spain and England. In Bavaria it's performed on May Day and begins with the traditional march and dance to raise the Maibaum. But in other areas of Europe it may be performed in mid-spring or summer. Originally it was danced around a living tree to which long ribbons were attached. Now dancers attach the ribbons to a flower-decked long staff. The object is to twirl the ribbons elegantly around the staff while singing and dancing.

Introduced to the Amanas by Carol S. Zuber, Gerda Graesser, Angelicka Bryson and their friends, it was performed at the very first Amana Maifest celebrations over 25 years ago.

The songs our Amana Maipole dancers sing are Bavarian folk songs meant to be performed around the Maipole. They celebrate true love, springtime and romance and often prompt melodic "calls" from the dancers who may hoot or holler a bit. Some Bavarian troupes include young men in the dance, but here in Amana it's an all-female tradition.

Don't miss seeing Amana's Maipole dancers as they perform Saturday morning after the parade, Saturday afternoon and Sunday afternoon of Maifest. Check the Maifest brochure or Amana_festivals.com website for times and locations
