

Door Jamb Hike

May 24, 2014

The group met bright and early Saturday morning at Tim's. and car pooling were high on the priority list.

Coffee

After meeting at the trail head, getting set for the trail, we ventured up the first steep slope. This was a good place to warm up; the chilly wind made for a cool start. It wasn't long before both legs and bodies were good to go for the rest of the trail. The sun came out and warmed us all.

Lots of the snow had melted and the mountain was starting to green up. Woohoo; hiking season is in full swing

The wind did pick up, but it was a refreshing break from the heat...if you can believe that.

Our "newbie hikers" had a great time...they said they were looking forward to the next one. More happy trails!

Lots of snow higher up. It made for some great views.

Along the way we had to stop for several breaks, catch our breath, eat some snacks and take some photos. It was nice not to have to deal with any snow along most of the trail. We only encountered a bit right at the top of Door Jamb.

We had lots of opportunity to work on learning to “trust our boots on the rock”. About half way up we got to hone our scrambling skills.

Summit! Several hours later we got to enjoy some great views, take some more pictures then we headed for home. Great job everyone!
