

Andrew Fleming, Ph.D.

Consultant & Trainer with the Treatment Implementation Collaborative, LLC

Andrew Fleming, Ph.D. is a co-founder of The Seattle Clinic and a member of the clinical faculty at the University of Washington Department of Psychology. He completed his doctoral study in Child Clinical Psychology at the University of Washington, internship in Child & Adolescent Psychology at the UCLA Medical Center, and fellowship at the UW School of Medicine Department of Psychiatry & Behavioral Sciences. Dr. Fleming trained directly with DBT treatment developer, Marsha Linehan, PhD, as a graduate student and post-doctoral fellow, and served on Dr. Linehan's treatment team for 5 years. Dr. Fleming has developed and researched an adaptation of DBT for young adults with ADHD, and collaborated on the largest multi-site clinical trial of DBT for suicidal teens. His current research focuses on improving interventions for teens and families affected by eating disorders, ADHD, autism spectrum disorders, and suicidal behavior.

Dr. Fleming consults on DBT implementation in various settings, and provides individual and practicum training to advanced doctoral students in delivering DBT and other evidence-based interventions for children, teens, adults, and families. Dr. Fleming is a Certified DBT Clinician by the DBT-Linehan Board of Certification. He is also a certified provider of Family-Based Treatment (FBT) for child and adolescent eating disorder and of PEERS social skills training for teens and young adults, and is a certified trainer in Functional Analytic Psychotherapy (FAP).
