

Indigent or Partially Indigent For Costs

Justice Administrative Commission (JAC): Indigent for Cost Criminal Defense Investigations

“When the police report doesn’t tell the whole story”

Not all criminal cases require the services of an experienced investigator. For those that do, our investigators can become an important member of your legal defense team. A private investigator can provide several unique and strategic functions in planning an effective defense to the government’s charges. Especially when the police report doesn’t tell the whole story.

One of the primary aims of our investigators is to invalidate or mitigate the investigation conducted by law enforcement by uncovering reasonable doubt. Often, police will identify a suspect and quickly construct a prosecutable case against that person. By doing so they may slant or cast information in the light most damaging to the defendant, disregarding other potential suspects, alibi witnesses or exculpatory evidence. We will thoroughly review all evidence and interview all parties involved to determine if there were any law enforcement errors or omissions; credibility issues; or other compelling agendas used to achieve a specific outcome. At the conclusion of the investigation we provide a detailed report showing the strength or weakness of the prosecution.

This type of investigation can be provided to you and your client free of charge in the course of a qualifying Indigent For Cost Representation. Our professional staff will assist in filing all indigent qualifying paperwork and motions required by the court and the JAC on behalf of the defendant.
